WE GO WHERE THE WIND BLOWS

2014 ROLEX BIG BOAT SERIES —

The 50th anniversary edition of the Rolex Big Boat Series broad-reached into town on September 11-14, attracting 99 boats and hundreds of sailors from around the country and beyond, to — let's not mince words — the greatest sailing venue on the planet.

For many, just participating in this preeminent buoy-racing event — amid year, only a quarter of the entries raced in the three handicap classes, while there was an all-time high of seven one-design classes — including the smallest boats ever to race in the Big Boat Series, the not-quite-23-ft J/70s.

Race Chairman Norman Davant

voiced the reality and frustration many feel about this trend in one sentence: "We work really hard to keep on the cutting edge of the sport — but we can't control what people buy."

Fortunately, while length and displacement 'quantities' might not be what they were back in 'the day', the quality of the RBBS's long weekend in September continues to shine brightly.

This year's racing followed the tried and true seven-race, no-throwout format, with two races per day Thursday through Saturday, and — with two exceptions that we'll note later — a single long 'grand tour' on Sunday.

All fleets rotated race days over three different 'circles', with starts at Alcatraz, Fort Mason and Berkeley — and all second races finished off the race deck of the hosting St. Francis YC. The summer wind machine delivered its usual low teens for the morning races, notching into the low 20s for most of the afternoon bouts. The windiest race was Saturday afternoon, when Swiftsure's instruments recorded a 31-knot gust on the Berkeley course.

While minor gear carnage — torn sails and broken hardware — seemed about average, a few boats suffered more expensive damage. The Melges 24 Posse dismasted and retired. Hawkeye, an IMX-38, also retired after a collision that involved two other boats. Flash Gordon 6 and Groovederci came together in the Farr 40 class, with the former suffering the worst of it. Helmut Jahn and his crew worked furiously into the night, and the boat was back on the line the next day. BridgeRunner, an SL33 sailing in the multihull division, broke a hiking rack while practicing on Wednesday, and delaminated a daggerboard later. "We're good for the local economy," quipped owner Urs Rothacher.

The only significant bodily injuries that we heard about both occurred on the same boat in the same race — and aboard a veteran RBBS boat with an otherwise sterling safety record. On Saturday's windy second race, the Express 37 Golden Moon's impeccable demeanor started to unwind when pit person Eliza Paulling fell during a tack and broke her right arm. After she signalled owner/skipper Kame Richards to keep going, at the next leeward rounding, the crew

San Francisco Bay's strong winds, tricky currents and spectacular vistas — is enough to check off the bucket list. For more serious programs, the Series serves as the year's final exams, graduation day and senior prom all rolled into one.

The parties aren't too bad, either.

First held in 1964, the BBS shares its half-century birthday with such cultural icons as the Beatles' first hit, Ford's Mustang, Dr. Strangelove and Sports Illustrated's first swimsuit issue. Back then, and for decades after, it really was a "Big" boat series, attracting many of the world's top syndicates, and year by year spattered boat finished — in first place.

Here's how some other boats 'earned it' this year. . .

HPR

Going into this year's series, Whiplash's Don Payan didn't have high hopes for a win. Although he feels HPR is "an excellent rule for high-performance boats," by size alone, Anatole Masfen's Kiwi-chartered TP 52 Beecom was heavily favored to sweep the class.

Then, on the second race on Thursday, everything changed. Carrying a big lead, Beecom was smoking down to mark #4 only to find. . . it wasn't there. They called the race committee, which rushed a boat out just as Whiplash arrived. She and the rest of the fleet rounded the mark boat itself — by which time Beecom was headed back to the dock.

To the astonishment of many, Beecom was denied redress by the international jury and scored DNF.

Suddenly, it was a whole new ballgame. Some quick calculations aboard Whiplash, an MC38, showed that Beecom could be beaten, even if she sailed a perfect series from then on.

For the next three days, while Beecom scored her expected bullets in the last four races, Whiplash and Greg Slyngstad's J/125 Hamachi traded seconds and thirds. As with all good edge-of-your-seaters, this one came down to the final race, the 25-mile Bay Tour on Sunday. Whiplash and Hamachi went into the start tied on points, and the game of 'stretch and reel' began — Whiplash's blazing downwind speed would stretch out her lead, only to have it reeled in by Hamachi, which could sail higher and faster upwind.

On the second-to-last beat, as the fleet was heading toward the weather mark and Hamachi was once again coming up fast on their weather hip, Whiplash tactician Scott Easom decided it was time to do or die. Whiplash tacked onto starboard and forced Hamachi to do the same, sending them into the building flood, then tacking back. When Hamachi tacked back, Whiplash did it again. As the opportunity for a third engagement developed, Easom spotted a huge shift over near Sausalito.

"At that point we just threw the yacht racing book out the window and went for the right," he says. With the combination of breeze and favorable current, Whiplash put three minutes and several hundred yards on Hamachi at the top mark, which the J/125 could never recover.

Whiplash won the series without winning a single race. Their 4,2,3,3,2,2,2

Lesley, Rick Shuldt, Julia Paxton, and Will Paxton calling tactics.

At the start of the first race on Thursday, a three-boat collision threatened to end Encore's series before it even began. Contact between Swiftsure and Hawkeye threw the latter boat into Encore. With minimal damage — a bent pulpit and stanchions on the aft port quarter — Koide and crew kept sailing and eventually won both Thursday races. In the protest room, Encore was absolved of blame. Swiftsure took a DSQ. Hawkeye incurred so much damage that owner Frank Morrow retired the boat from further competition.

As if her first day didn't offer enough drama, the ORR series came down to the final race. Encore had only a one-point lead over Jeff Pulford's Sydney 38 Bustin Loose. Due to a race committee timing error and subsequent throwout of a race earlier in the series, the ORR class was given two buoy races on Sunday instead of one long grand tour.

After more than a week of downwind driving, Koide says, "the boat and I got to know each other a lot better." Another big factor was his crew: Ben Burbridge, Casey Gray, Kelsey Tostenson, Suzie Koide (Wayne's wife and Encore's pit person), Cherie Schaman, Randall tired," says Koide. "I told the crew to focus less on winning and more on sailing our best and feeling good about what we had accomplished in this year's series."

In the end, they got to do both — win and feel good. Their final score was 15. BustinLoose was second, four points back, with Gerry Sheridan's Elan 40 Tupelo Honey only a point behind in third.

Alex Roepers could be headed toward a three-Rolex year. In May, he drove his Farr 40 Plenty to a North American Championship in Long Beach. Last month, he won a 15-boat-strong fleet at the Big Boat Series. And this month — October 15-18, to be exact — he'll join an even bigger fleet to vie for his ultimate goal, his first Farr 40 World Championship in seven years of racing in this high-octane fleet. All three events are sponsored by Rolex.

If Plenty's Big Boat Series performance is any indication, they might as well engrave the Worlds trophy right now. In a talent-laden fleet hailing from eight different countries — and including 2012 World Champion Flash Gordon 6 and 2013 World Champion Enfant Terrible — Plenty trounced all comers. She posted five bullets in the fleet's eight-race series (they also raced two races on Sunday, per request) for a score of 13, beating Alberto Rossi's second-place Enfant Terrible by a whopping 24 points. John Demourkas' Santa Barbara-based Groovederci was third.

Plenty's crew consisted of tactician Terry Hutchinson, Greg Gendell, Matt McDonough, Nate Reynolds, Dimitri Simons, Scott Holmgren, Mark Langford, Morgan Trubovich, James Baxter and Paul Simas.

Andrew Hunn and his Tasmania-based Voodoo Chile, sixth on overall points, earned top honors in the Farr 40 Corinthian fleet-within-a-fleet, beating out five other Corinthians.

This division and the series suffered a shock when Bernardo Minkow, co-owner of the Mexican entry Flojito Y Cooperando, was found dead in his hotel room Friday morning, apparently of natural causes. His boat partner, Julian Fernandez, elected not to race that day, but he and the crew were back on the course Saturday morning. The fleet flew black flags for the remainder of the series, and a moment of silence for Minkow was observed at the awards ceremony.

What's the secret to winning the largest class (19 boats) in the Big

Boat Series? Well, if you're Bruce Stone, "You marry a really smart tactician." That would be three-time All-American, Nicole Breault.

After Arbitrage's second place in last year's RBBS, Stone, Breault, and their crew, Terry Brennan, Phillip Berner, and Bob Dearborn — along with bow alternates McKinsey Wilson and Cheryl Lincoln — came out swinging this year. They scored 1,3,2,1,1 in the first five races, then stumbling to fifth in Race six. In the meantime, Scooter Simmons' 2011 and 2013 winner, Blackhawk, was rising through the ranks after an uneven start, and by Saturday afternoon had also posted three bullets. Phillip Laby's Godot, running third, was also in the hunt.

Only seven points separated the leaders going into Sunday's grand finale. Blackhawk hung on for that win, with Jeff Litfin's Mojo second and Godot third. But Arbitrage's fourth was good enough to carry them through to their second series win (the first was in 2010). They earned the Commodore's Cup trophy plus a Rolex watch — which Bruce gratefully passed on to "the hardest working member of the team," Nicole.

Melges 24

Don Jesberg's resume at Big Boat Series hearkens back to 1973 when he crewed on the Newport 41 Resolute. This year, his weapon of choice was a Melges 24, in the fleet's second year as an RBBS one-design division.

This series was Viva's first serious outing since winning the 2013 Melges 24 Corinthian Worlds, held on the Bay last October. But it was hard to tell they'd taken much of a break. Once the team notched their first win in the first race, it was as good as over for the other eight boats in the class: They won every race during the first three days. Viva sat out Sunday (for a 10/DNS) and still beat the second boat — Duane Yoslov's Nothing Ventured — by seven points. Shenya Kirushkin-Stepanoff's Insolent Minx was third.

Viva's crew this year included Andrea Cibato, Andrew Kobylinski, Andrew Holdsworth and Eric Baumhoff calling tactics. Conspicuous in his absence was Zarko Draganic, a longtime regular aboard both the Melges and Jesberg's other Viva, an Etchells. Sadly, Draganic passed away in March. In his memory, Jesberg and crew celebrated each Big Boat Series win by attaching a 'Z' to the boat and sail. "These wins, and this series, are dedicated to Zarko," says Jesberg.

Double Trouble. Thirteen boats signed up for the J/70s' second year at RBBS, and the racing was hot, heavy and wet. Aboard DT for the sleighride were Nick Catley and James "Hippie" Clappier, with Paul Cayard on tactics and mainsheet.

Double Trouble finished mid-fleet in the first race, but found her stride quickly and started putting firsts and seconds on the scoreboard. By Saturday morning, she had edged ahead of Chris Anderson's Perfect Wife. On the second race Saturday, a long 15-miler for the J/70s, DT had several tough breaks. But you know what they say: When the going gets tough . . .

"We were over early at the start but did not hear our sail number called for more than a minute," wrote Cayard in his online newsletter. "Then we got in a big entanglement at the first mark and

If the name Double Trouble sounds familiar, it might be because Andy Costello and partner Peter Krueger have co-owned four Bay-based boats by that name. than the leaders and made some gains. Then the leaders had a few problems of their own. In the end, says Cayard, "We managed to work through the fleet for the win."

A second in the Bay tour on Sunday secured their 17-point series victory. Perfect Wife finished second with 31, with Geoff McDonald's IFA a point back at third.

J/120

"It's a good move to abdicate the throne occasionally," laughs David Halliwill, who earned a Rolex this year without once setting foot on his class-winning J/120 Peregrine. In the weeks leading up to the series, the New York-based owner knew he wouldn't have time to practice, so he handed driver and friend Mike O'Callaghan the keys to the sports car and said, "Go have fun."

This was Peregrine's first division win at Big Boat Series. To achieve it, O'Callaghan and crew had to outsail several former RBBS winners, including Mr. Magoo, Chance and Dayenu. Magoo, the 2013 division winner, was off the pace this year, but Barry Lewis's Chance was nipping at Peregrine's 'talons' the whole series. As was the former Dayenu, now sailing as Julian by Yasuhide Kobayashi and his Tokyo-based team.

Chance held a slim one-point lead at the halfway mark, then faded as the Peregrine crew — tactician Randy Smith, Tad Lacey, Greg 'Radar' Felton, EJ Rowland, John Verdoia and son Alex Verdoia, Kristen McCulloch, Chris Davison, Wilson Wilkom and Victor Piltch — really poured on the coal, scoring two firsts and a second over the weekend, for a series total of 14. Chance was second with 19, with Julian third at 24.

J/111

Rob Theis' Aeolus stumbled out of the blocks at this year's RBBS, finishing sixth in the first race. Not a good way to start four days of racing in the seven-boat-strong J/111 fleet. So when asked about his most memorable part of the 2014 Series Theis said, "The rest of it, as we worked our way back up." Aeolus improved to second and fourth on Friday, then had her best day on Saturday, scoring two bullets. With up-to-then leader Dorian McKelvey's MadMen having their worst day on Saturday (a fifth and eighth), Theis and his crew — tactician Seadon Wijzen, Chris Watts, Orlando Montalvan, Doug Wilhelm, Brian Edwards, Chris Smith and JB Cianciarulo — suddenly found themselves leading on points.

returning to winning form, prevailed for the win, with Nesrin Banoz's Swift Ness charging out of the cheap seats to snag second. But Aeolus' third was good enough to win this year's Atlantic Perpetual. MadMen finished second and Big BLAST! rounded out the podium at third.

Express 37

You'll recall from earlier that Golden Moon's usual exemplary decorum was blown to bits in Saturday's windy second race. But here's the rest of the story. After the injuries to two crew, and finally unwrapping the big white cocoon that their spinnaker had made of the lee-ward mark (the sail, amazingly, survived undamaged), co-owner Kame Richards figured they'd tanked that race for sure.

"Then we looked over and saw Expeditious round the mark the wrong way! What are the chances!?" he laughs. By the time that crew sorted out their mistake — no quick task in the strong flood — Golden Moon was back underway, and hung on to finish first. They bulleted the six-boat fleet in every other race, too, except Sunday's grand tour, which went to Bartz Schneider and Expeditious. Golden Moon's final tally was eight points to Expeditious's 15. Jack Peurach's Elan, with 26, came in third.

This was Golden Moon's sixth Big Boat Series win in the last 10 years — all of which were injury free, by the way.

Aboard this year were Mike Mannix on tactics, Tom and Eliza Paulling, Aimee Daniel, Rebecca Hinden and Dave Little — with guest appearances by John Horsch, Larry Tuttle, Karina Vogan, Buzz Blackett, Jamal Berkeley and John Collins.

Multihulls

"It's just like driving a fast car," says tactician Charlie Ogletree of 2014's biggest and fastest boat, Tom Seibel's MOD 70 trimaran Orion. "You have to make a lot of your decisions from a long way out."

Words of wisdom for a boat that hit a top speed of 36 knots during the Series (and has done over 40 on other days).

But even with long-range planning — and even with a 'league of extraordinary gentlemen' crew that included Peter Isler, Damian Foxhall, Mal St. Maurice, Paul Allen, Paco Cabildo, Dan Morris and Brian Thompson — an overall handicap win at any race is far from a slam-dunk. (Note: The multis use a BAMA rating with a Texel factor.)

Last year, in her first appearance at RBBS, Orion notched a 5,1,4,1,4,1,5 for a third in class. It didn't take a rocket scientist to see what was going on: in the lighter-air first race, Orion couldn't stretch her long legs. But in the windier second race, she could. So this year the crew worked hard on rig tune and maximizing the boat for lighter conditions.

Another key ingredient was Seibel himself. "Tom has come a long way in his driving skills since last year," says Ogletree.

It all paid off. After a disappointing fourth in race one, Orion won every other race. Her 10-point total bettered Jerome Ternynck's Extreme 40 SmartRecruiters by five points and Peter Stoneberg's Prosail 40 Shadow by nine. The 2013 division winner, Urs Rothacher's SL33, BridgeRunner, was fourth.

An exciting Express 37 start, with 'Golden Moon' in the lead and focused on victory. Inset: Mike Mannix and Kame Richards.

And so another Rolex Big Boat Series sails into the history books.

What will the 2014 edition be remembered for — besides its golden anniversary? For starters, the usual things that any RBBS offers: great breeze; competitive sailing at its finest; great parties; great friends — and lots of fun.

Highlights? According to our informal survey: the 'circle' courses with mid-Bay starts; flood currents (really!); Rolex' always-great sponsorship; and everybody's favorite by far — the 'ocean' mark off Pt. Diablo. "A really cool idea, a nice break from the usual inside courses, and a neat new perspective racers don't usually get to see," sums up some of the comments.

Low points: Some protest decisions and some course management. Technically, using out-of-town PROs assures fair and even racing, but San Francisco's unique winds and currents sometimes confound the best of intentions. "Last year, I didn't even know the Race Committee was there," said one skipper. "This year, I did. When the RC becomes part of the equation, something's wrong."

As for the future, like it or not, the trend toward one-design — and away from handicap racing — will continue. "That's the direction you're going to see everything going," says Steve Taft, who chaired the Big Boat Series for 10 years (and raced in it for the 40th time this year, helming Swiftsure). "It wouldn't surprise me if we didn't have any handicap classes in the next few years."

While we miss the days of bloopers, maxis and IOR death rolls as much as anyone, we also marvel at competition closer and speeds higher than anything you might have seen 25 years ago—and at buy-in prices that many mere mortals can actually afford.

Having covered the Big Boat Series from the inception of this magazine in 1977, and having seen all its good years and not-so-good years, here's our take-away:

With its core values well established, its reputation widely respected, its venue unmatched anywhere in the world, and its openness to new trends at the forefront, the Rolex Big Boat Series has always attracted the best and brightest sailors in the world. And it will continue to do so. As for the few hundred Corinthian sailors, many of whom are local weekend warriors, how many other venues allow you to match wits and rub elbows with the likes of Cayard, Isler and other sailing luminaries?

Bottom line: Whether the boats are large or small, one-design or handicapped, we can easily see the Rolex Big Boat Series' reign as the West Coast's premier buoy racing event continuing for another 50 years. Or more. Long live the King!

ODILE ORDEAL —

Packing sustained winds of at least 125 mph and dumping torrents of rain, Hurricane Odile was the most destructive storm ever to clobber the Baja Peninsula.

When it roared through the resort town of Cabo Lucas at 10:45 p.m.

Sunday night, September 14, its Category 3 ferocity mangled the metal awnings and fascias of hotels and commercial buildings as if they were made of paper mache. It shattered the heavy plate-glass windows of beachfront hotels and south-facing storefronts as if they were delicate crystal, and sent rivers of mud coursing through downtown boulevards and backstreets alike. Trees were uprooted everywhere and hundreds of power poles toppled, shorting out so many transformers in quick succession that some witnesses compared the scene to a fireworks display.

JILL & GREG DELEZYNSKI

Simone and Paul had moved to La Paz about a year ago aboard their ferro ketch 'Tabasco II'.

Although some beachfront hotels were stripped of all but their steel and concrete elements, the modest dwellings of nearby barrio neighborhoods suffered the most: In some aerial photos of the storm's aftermath, once-vibrant communities looked as if they'd been pulverized by a nuclear explosion.

Amazingly, according to staffers of the Cabo Marina, there was no major damage to yachts or sportsfishing boats docked there, although a number of launches and dinghies sank — at peak intensity rain fell there at a rate of 12 inches per hour. We know of no boats that elected to weather the storm in the open anchorage outside the harbor — which would have been suicidal. Boats lying in the Puerto Los Cabos marina, 18 miles to the east, also came through the blow relatively unscathed.

Early Monday morning the massive system descended on La Paz, 80 miles to the north. By then Odile had 'weakened' to a Category 2 — a "moderate" hurricane with winds up to 110 mph. It inflicted much less damage to shoreside infrastructure there than at Cabo. Nonetheless, it wreaked havoc on countless buildings, and caused a citywide power outage.

There too, boats fared well in the town's four marinas: Marina del la Paz, Marina Palmira, Marina Costa Baja and Marina Cortez. But the popular cruiser anchorage between the cityfront and the Mogote peninsula became a roiling cauldron of angry water. Once the chaos subsided, cruisers Bob and Sherry Davis of the Irwin 44 Nirvana reported that at least 27 boats had broken loose from their moorings, and at least three of those had sunk. At the Atalanta dry storage yard, a number of boats on stands toppled over, causing dismastings and other damage to about a dozen boats.

Those few who elected to ride out the storm aboard suffered a nightmarish ordeal, which three sailors did not survive. The day after the storm, the Fisher 30 ketch Princess was among the sunken hulls, and her German-born liveboard owner, Guenter Trebbow, 76, was unaccounted for. Boaters reported hearing his cries for help as the boat went down, but none were in a position to render aid. Mexican navy divers eventually discovered his lifeless body inside the hull. A longtime expat, Guenter was said to have been a gregarious fellow who regularly served as controller on the local cruiser net.

Also missing were Brits Simone Wood, 47, and Paul Whitehouse, 45, of the 50-ft ferrocement ketch Tabasco II. Navy divers searched the sunken hull, but there was no sign of the couple. For four days, friends of the popular couple held out hope that they had somehow survived. But on the fifth day, Friday, Simone's body was found deep in the mangroves at the back of the bay. Two days later Paul was found there also. According to one report, they were both wearing survival suits, which, some have speculated, may have impeded their ability to swim to shore. Both were fit and athletic, as they ran a dive operation that they'd begun about a year ago. They and Guenter will be sorely missed by many.

As tragic as the news of these deaths is, though, it seems remarkable that they were the only fatalities within the boating community, given the violence of the storm. Even more astonishing, is that we have seen no overall death count higher than six.

mountain range that it gave some observers an eerie sense of doom — especially when Odile briefly built to Category-4 intensity less than a day before making landfall.

By midday Monday, when the storm walloped Puerto Escondido — 130 miles north of La Paz — its strength may have diminished below official hurricane strength (<74 mph) but it still had plenty of destructive power. Jake Howard of the Hunter 45 Jake later reported that four boats were beached in the main anchorage, seven more piled up on the seawall near the Fonatur marina (three of which sank), and three more went ashore in the Waiting Room anchorage (at least one of which sank).

At about 5 p.m. the same day Odile had traveled another 125 miles north to the popular cruisers' haven of Santa Rosalia. It had downshifted to tropical-storm status, but still packed winds of 63 mph. Long after it passed, a report from Bob Smith of the custom 44-ft cat Pantera crackled over the radio waves: two boats sank, one washed ashore, and the town was awash in mud.

San Carlos lies 75 miles to the east of Santa Rosalia — and of the storm's center — but even in its diminished state the system was hundreds of miles wide. When the storm surge arrived at the normally secure San Carlos anchorage, it still carried enough power to west trajectory that it had been following for days. In fact, several days before making landfall, its track had aligned so perfectly with the spine of Baja's break loose a trimaran and two monohulls from their moorings and drive them ashore. We understand that no boats were substantially damaged in either of the bay's two marinas — Marina San Carlos and Marina Real — or in the Marina Seca dry storage yard.

The storm's track paralleled the spine of the Baja peninsula all the way past Bahia de Los Angeles, roughly 500 miles north of Cabo, before beginning to arc to the northeast toward Arizona.

As horrific as it was for both locals and tourists to endure the brunt of Odile's fury, the aftermath was surely worse — at least in Cabo San Lucas.

Many of the roughly 30,000 tourists in Cabo and nearby San Jose del Cabo had ridden out the storm barcaded in bathrooms or beneath furniture as window panes shattered into shrapnel, and virtually everything became a life-threatening projectile. But when the skies cleared, a new ordeal began: For most, there was no electricity, no electronic communication, no access to cash via ATMs, limited access to food and water, and perhaps worst of all, the prospect of waiting for days before they could get a flight out of this 'war zone'. Infrastructure at the international airport was completely trashed. Having gone from sipping umbrella drinks at poolside one day to effectively refugee status the next, some tourists were critical of the government relief effort — perhaps because they had no perspective on the magnitude of the damage.

But as soon as skies cleared, a phalanx of electrical repair trucks crossed by ferry from Mazatlan and headed straight to Cabo like a liberating army. Military planes soon arrived on the airport tarmac to begin an evacuation of tourists that would take three or four days, despite roughly 200 additional (free) flights to mainland gateways by Alaska Air, Southwest, Aero Mexico, Interjet and others.

People desperate for food and water — along with some genuine bad guys— looted windowless storefronts as well as big box stores like Costco and Wal-Mart before police and soldiers arrived in sufficient numbers to restore order. But at the same time that some news organizations were over-hyping the initial chaos, many unsung heroes were quietly performing acts of human kindness. Once back home, tourists relayed that many Mexican hotel staffers had put guests' needs before their own — even though some had lost their homes.

Not surprisingly, the La Paz cruising community pulled together immediately, refloating beached boats on every high tide, and creating a relief fund (see end note) for those whose boats had been damaged or lost. "We will carry on, clean ourselves up and keep on living the dream of being aboard a boat in the beautiful Sea of Cortez and the city of La Paz, Baja California Sur," wrote Shelly Ward, commodore of the long-time cruiser bastion Club Cruceros.

After about a week all federal roads had been reopened; with well over 1,000 workers on the job, electrical capacity was improving daily (then 80% in La Paz, but only 20% in Cabo), banks and stores were reopening, and 27,000 tourists had been evacuated.

As we've seen repeatedly over the years, Mexicans are incredibly resilient and hard-working. With tourism being the mainstay of their economy, we expect life will be back to some measure of normalcy in a matter of weeks.

Although tied in wind strength with 1967's Olivia as the strongest hurricane ever to hit the Baja peninsula, scientists rate Odile as the most powerful ever due to measurements of pressure.

More important than such scientific nuance, though, it was by far the most destructive Baja storm ever to both shoreline infrastructure and boats. And it may well be the first hurricane to take a sailor's life in the Sea of Cortez.

SOCAL TA-TA II —

Great sailing, great stops, great hosts — and most of all great participants. That — along with a little luck and unusually warm and sunny weather — is what made the second SoCal Ta-Ta Cruising Rally from Santa Barbara to Catalina — via Santa Cruz Island, Channel Islands Harbor, and Paradise Cove — the sailor-pleasing event that it was.

A total of 39 boats, from 25 to 54 feet in length, including two powerboats, participated. Some 140 sailors took part in at least some of the event. Outside obligations meant some had to miss the first or the last leg. A couple who signed up even had to miss all but the opening or closing party — but still had fun.

Some Northern California sailors mock Southern California sailing conditions. They wouldn't if they'd been on this year's Ta-Ta, as everyone sailed, or could have sailed, all 100 miles in the four sailing legs of the six-day event. While the wind was sometimes a little light, it did blow as much as 25 knots with gusts to 30 on one leg, and many boats were frequently sailing at hull speed on two of the four legs. The Ta-Ta was suitable for gentlemen, as there was no upwind sailing.

There was light wind under a disappearing marine layer for the 11 a.m. start of the first leg at the Santa Barbara half-mile buoy. As the marine layer cleared the wind filled in, and everyone enjoyed reaching conditions for the 24 miles to Santa Cruz Island. Most flew gennakers or spinnakers, and if we're not mistaken, everybody sailed all but the first couple of miles. The breeze reached the mid-teens for the last five miles, allowing Jim Eggleston of the Medford, Oregon Corsair 27 Origami — which would be the wet hot-rod of the event — to hit 15 knots.

The wind was on the light side for the 16-mile sail from Santa Cruz Island to Channel Islands Harbor, but still strong enough for everyone to sail the entire way, mostly close reaching under spinnaker. Boats sailed in close company, making it a lot of fun and providing great photo opportunities.

The 24-mile third leg from Channel Islands Harbor to Paradise Cove was the windiest. Patsy 'La Reina del Mer' Verhoeven of the La Paz-based Gulfstar 50 Talion saw a couple of 30-knot gusts, and everyone else reported winds in the mid-20s during the stretch between Pt. Mugu and Pt. Dume(tz).

Even the more experienced sailors had trouble with the jibe off windy Zuma Beach. We on Profligate, and then Jared Brockway and crew on the Ventura-based Contour 34 trimaran Orange, muffed our jibes. Patrick McCormick of the charging Alamos Bay-based Beneteau 440 St. Somewhere looked as if he and his crew might pull it off — until one of the sheets came off the clew of the chute.

Keith and Terry Albrecht of the beautiful Alamos Bay-based Columbia 36 Oso Rojo got a spinnaker caught in their prop, while F. Stewart Seymour and crew of the San Diego-based Newport 30 Saoirse couldn't get the chute down until they were at anchor. Both boats got assistance from other members of the fleet.

For pure pleasure sailing, the final 30-mile leg from Paradise Cove to Two Harbors was the best. Early starters had to motor, but got a nice wildlife show. Roger and Diana Frizzelle of the San Francisco-based Catalina 470 Di's Dream reported seeing several blue whales in their path.

The wind quickly built to the mid-teens, providing ideal close reaching all the way to the island. Some boats were able to carry the entire way, while others had to go to white sails. Origami hit 18 knots, Profligate had minutes at over 13 knots, and just about everyone was regularly at hull speed. As was the case during the previous three legs, it was warm and the seas were negligible.

There were five stops on the Ta-Ta itinerary: Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz Island, Channel Islands Harbor, Paradise Cove and Two Harbors.

The Santa Barbara Harbor Patrol was nice enough to allow the fleet to reserve slips this year, and managed to get everyone in a berth near the end of Marina One. The folks at the Santa Barbara YC, established in 1872, put on a great BBQ on the beach beneath their club, which wasn't inundated by high tide until after the last guest had left. We don't know if the bartenders have been around for the entire history of the club, but they said the Ta-Ta Party was the most fun of any they'd ever seen there. It might have had something to do with the conga line atop the marina embankment.

Since hurricane Marie had generated epic surf on the back side of Santa Cruz

DOIN' THE CONGA

Island two weeks before, and hurricane Norbert was sending a swell north, there was concern in the fleet that the Smugglers's Cove Ta-Ta destination on the south side of the island might be untenable. But Larry Fortmuller and Elizabeth 'EB' Barden on the Newport Beach-based Grand Banks 42 Simply Grand got there early to report that the conditions were fine. There was a small ground swell, but no sea, so it was less roly than during the first Ta-Ta.

Nonetheless, about a fifth of the fleet decided to spend the two nights on the north side of the island, at either Scorpion, Little Scorpion or Pelican. They reported that it was flat — except for a brief moment in the middle of the night. That was when a large ship wake put the squeeze job on Talion, as she was the monohull in the center of a nautical ménage à trois with catamarans Sea

Level and Beach Access.

The weather conditions for the two-night stop at Santa Cruz Island were idyllic. There was lots of sunshine and none of that gloomy marine layer nonsense that can plague the Southern California coast. The first night featured the epic 'Super Moon' rising beautifully over Anacapa Island. If you really used your imagination, you could pretend you'd anchored at one of the islands off Naples. Swimming at the Channel Islands almost always requires a wetsuit. Not for this year's Ta-Ta, as the water temp was a salubrious 74 degrees. There were lots of takers. Others kayaked, SUP'd, got flipped in the surf and otherwise had fun in and on the water. Several groups of folks went ashore at the National Park entrance at Prisoners, fooled around on ancient farm equipment, and marveled at the view from the headland looking southeast to the Scorpions, Anacapa and the mainland coast.

Not long before the start of the Ta-Ta, the event was jeopardized because Jim and Kent Milski's Schionning 49 'Sea Level', an around-the-world vet, reaches in light air with sunny Anacapa Island in the background.

SOCAL TA-TA II —

Redondo Beach couldn't get its act together at King Harbor. Despite the fact they have a half-mile long area behind a massive breakwater, the Harbor Patrol told the PooBob that it didn't look as if there would be enough room for the 40+ Ta-Ta boats. One major problem was the installation of 25 mooring buoys. Not only had the city not figured out how much to charge for them or who was going to administer them, it turns out they are inadequate for their intended purpose. Further, no boats would be allowed to anchor around them. An unusually well run city for California, Redondo can do much better with the huge amount of space behind the breakwater.

Without King Harbor as a viable stop, the Grand PooBob had to come up with a solution. Maybe an extra night at Santa Cruz Island or Catalina? Then he remembered Channel Islands Harbor. From the moment he asked Michelle LaPointe and Dan Ward, the managers at Channel Islands Marina and Vintage Marina Partners — both owned by the same Central Valley family — if it might be a possible Ta-Ta stop, they couldn't do enough for the Ta-Ta. Free slips for all monohulls, all restrooms, showers and laundry facilities unlocked for the night, floating docks for the 140-person party, all the necessary tables and chairs, live music by liveaboard Finhead and Bryna, two BBQs with cooks. Plus transportation to the Winnco so the PooBob could buy 35 rotisserie chickens, 60 hamburgers, 36 hot dogs, and everything else for the free Ta-Ta dinner.

Frank Laza, who runs the Duffy electric boat dealership, showed up to shuttle folks on the multihulls between the long dock at Paradise Park and the party site. The unofficial Mayor of Channel Islands, Laza presented the PooBob with a 25-year-old copy of Latitude 38, with Laza in the group shot on the cover. He also reminded the PooBob that they'd done the San Francisco to Catalina Race 25 years before on a Farr 65 sharpie.

Thanks to the great hospitality, many Ta-Ta participants have put Channel Islands on their 'don't miss' list.

The Paradise Cove stop was perhaps the one fly in the Ta-Ta ointment, at least for some crews on monohulls. The leftover swell from the strong afternoon breeze had the monohulls rocking 'n' rolling all night. Some, such as Diana on Di's Dream and Cherie Sogsti on Steve Moffett's Alamitos Bay-based Jeanneau 45.2 Tempest, said it wasn't a big deal for them. Many others, particularly on boats without flopper stoppers, reported they didn't sleep a wink all night. As a result, Paradise Cove as a future stop is somewhat up in the air.

Two Harbors was Two Harbors in all its lovable dusty, funky glory. There were plenty of empty moorings, a few places to anchor in only moderately deep water, hot showers at $2 for 3+ minutes, and the godawfully popular Buffalo Milk diabetic specials at the patio bar. After a night of rest and getting the Beer Fest crowd cleared out, the Bandstand Area was all ready for the final Ta-Ta party. With a potluck BBQ, slide presentation of the event, conga line and 'awards' under the palms, it was a happy wrap.

We can't say enough about the great folks who participated. Steve and Julie McShea of the Seawind 1160 cat Always had come all the way from Lihue,

SOCAL TA-TA II

Kauai — although we hope not just for the Ta-Ta. Dr. Dave Pisana and his wife Laurie had trailered their Odin 27 Odin the Wanderer all the way from Salt Lake City. And others had come down from San Francisco Bay.

Thanks to Profligate's being able to accommodate up to 50 people on the Lido Deck, people had a good chance to mingle at the three Sundowner parties. Based on the first Ta-Ta, we expected half the participants to attend the final party. Almost everybody decided to show, so we're lucky they had more charcoal in the general store.

We've always thought — and continue to think — that the Santa Barbara to King Harbor Race, an 81-miler that takes the fleet from Santa Barbara, between Anacapa and Santa Cruz Island, then down to King Harbor's Redondo Beach, is the most fun race in Southern California. But during the dozen or so times we've done it, we always got to the dead-air spot off Anacapa in the lee of Santa Cruz Island and thought, 'What's the rush? Why not stop at Santa Cruz Island for a couple of nights? And why not another stop at Paradise Cove, instead of crossing Santa Monica bay when it's dark, damp and the wind fluky enough to make you miss Last Call?' That's why the PooBob created the Ta-Ta.

If you're into pleasure sailing more than racing, the Ta-Ta might be an option you want to consider the next time it rolls around.

DELTA DOO DAH 2014

Repeating last year's DIY theme, the Delta Doo Dah cast the fates of 98 crews to the wind this summer, trusting them to find their way on the meandering waters of California's vast Delta.

Even so, plenty of support was forthcoming from the event's many sponsors, starting with Berkeley Yacht Club, which hosted the rally's Kickoff Party in May, and the generous donors who made the prize drawing there so much fun. A complete list of sponsors can be found on the fourth page of this article.

Two more official events followed in June: Owl Harbor's Who's in Blues BBQ on the 14th, and a Summer Sailstice potluck picnic at Tiki Lagun Marina on Turner Cut June 21, where Flibbertigibbet won the grand prize of a year's membership with towing to BoatUS.

Who's in Blues, a party for Doo Dah sailors and marina tenants, coincided with the Isleton Cajun & Blues Festival. Terry Hanck's band provided the music, and Owl Harbor supplied a free catered BBQ dinner and lots of door prizes. With plenty of helpers, harbormaster Devery Stockon always throws a great party.

Since most of the activities in this year's DIY DDD took place outside the official itinerary, we'll let the sailors themselves pick up the story from here:

Hooked — Serendipity 43 Sailor Cherry, Oakland

We finally made it to the Delta! Hooked, a bluewater racer with a cruising conversion, set sail early on June 13 to a warm-water destination full of cool marinas and anchorages just 60 miles from home.

My planning began in March: from picking anchorages to three-course healthy meals on the hook. I also had to organize space and items to accommodate three different groups of guests and boat work/refinishing jobs too.

Thanks to Latitude's previous articles, I learned that floats, games, hats, sunshades and dinks are a must. We even towed a Jet Ski while sailing across the Slot. Games were Liar's Dice, Yahtzee and Cards Against Humanity, all a hit. I can't imagine going to the Delta without pool floats and toys.

Owl Harbor is the best marina I have ever been to. Besides having the nicest harbormaster, the grounds are a dog and gardener/grower's dream, ideal for entertaining overnight guests. Free fresh organic eggs and vegetables abound.

We found the secret beach on the tule island southeast of Korth's Pirate's Lair, where we beached a friend's boat, swam, played with water cannons, and picked up trash.

After hosting most of our landlubber guests, it was time to go anchor out. The Bedrooms in Potato Slough were at the top of my list. We anchored on the southeast side of Fig Island. The highlight was at sunset, when we lay out on the foredeck or in a float swaying off the stern while hundreds of swallows and cormorants sang and glided just a few feet above us, circling from the trees and around the boat. It was as if we were in a tropical country being brushed with a light 85° breeze while gazing at an Impressionist's painted sky – spectacular. The motor back was rough! I was not happy and was of little help. Thankfully my helmsman took us into a slip for a few days to wait out the honkin' weather.

Cherry from 'Hooked' shows off some swag and the prize she won at the Kickoff Party, a serving set from the Starboard Collection.

Two Truths — Dana 24 Bob Scharf, Berkeley

In mid-July, we spent the night in Rio Vista tied up at the Delta Marina guest dock. It was just us and one other boat, until about 6:00 p.m. when another boat showed up, and it turned out to be another Dana 24 doing the Delta

Doo Dah: Little Lara, owned by Jay and Peggy Bowden. It was a pleasure meeting them, and learning that Little Lara is, if I am correct, the smallest boat ever to do the Baja Ha-Ha. We found it a happy coincidence to meet up with others doing the Delta in a Dana.

We returned from Rio Vista with the ebb, but were surprised at just how challenging it was to sail through Suisun and San Pablo Bays in a big blow: the strong headwind and the ebb current converged to stir up quite a chop. Next time, if the winds are blowing, I'll avoid max ebb.

I'm a PreCursor — MacGregor 25 Bryan & Cindy Blagg, Lake Yosemite

We had planned our itinerary and had already talked to all the marinas. When we called Sugar Barge to let them know we were running late, we were asked if our mast folds down. They had assigned us and our buddy boat, the MacGregor 26 Prime Time, covered berths! But they quickly fixed our spots, and, when we got there around 5:30 p.m., they were watching for us.

High points included finding Foster's Bighorn Café in Rio Vista and Delta Marina, now among our favorites.

DELTA DOO DAH 2014

Thetis — Ericson 32

Steve Andersen, San Rafael

We started our Delta cruise from the Sausalito Cruising Club on July 14, and spent the first two nights in Martinez, doing some shopping there. We sailed to Sevenmile Slough and anchored, then to Mandeville Tip for a yacht club raft-up. We left for Little Venice Island on the 20th. On August 1, I sailed to Stockton Sailing Club to get the free dinners I'd won at the Kickoff Party.

We sailed to Windmill Cove for their blues festival, then to Herman and Helen's — so sad to see it shut. We motored up Potato Slough for the weekend, where we met some great folks. Now back at Little Venice, I'm waiting for my new dodger to be delivered — I really want it on for the trip back. And so far I haven't used the keel as a fathometer!

Stella — Back Cove 33

Roy & Carol Ann Falk
Sausalito

On August 25, in clear weather, light winds and flat seas, I motored 3.5 hours from Sausalito to Antioch Marina, where I rendezvoused with my wife Carol Ann (aka Peanut) and Katy, a Chihuahua/Jack Russell mix, and loaded the provisions Peanut brought from Trader Joe's.

The next day, we headed up the San Joaquin River bound for Giusti's in Walnut Grove. At a leisurely pace, we motored past Pirate's Lair and Willow Berm and into the North Fork of the Mokelumne River, arriving at the Miller's Ferry Bridge at 10 minutes past the end of the bridge tender's 9-to-5 shift.

SEAN REYNOLDS

The new half-moku wrap on 'Roxy's tiller will help protect it from the schooner's cleats.

We tied up at a private dock, with the belated permission of Janet and Bill Stokes, and went by dinghy under the bridge to Giusti's for a delicious dinner. All the locals there knew that Stella was tied up at the Stokes' dock.

The following day we continued up Snodgrass Slough to Lost Slough, where we anchored mid-stream and pulled our stern toward the shade trees on the bank with two stern lines. Unbelievably, we had the place to ourselves. We skinny-dipped and chilled out for four days. Sublime.

Back downriver, we turned up the North Fork of the Moke to Tower Park Marina for a complete change of pace. On Labor Day Weekend there were dozens, maybe hundreds, of ski boats, Jet Skis and noisy, powerful cigarette boats — quite the contrast to Lost Slough. The Doo Dah website informed us of a skydiver show, and it was fabulous. Twenty-four skydivers (including six women) parachuted out of a WWII airplane and landed, one after another, either on the river or on the levee. We met John, the owner of Rosa's restaurant, and he was delighted to know we were here because of Latitude 38. We had so much fun that we stayed an extra night.

From Tower Park we proceeded down through Potato Slough and spent the night at Willow Berm.

The next day we motored to Tinsley Island, where, as guests, we stayed for three nights in the very lap of luxury.

This has been a trip of extreme contrasts. First the peace and tranquility of Lost Slough, then Tower Park with the raucousness of bikini-babe-laden ski boats and dueling monster sound systems (Highway to Hell vs. All My Exes Live in Texas), and finally the posh preserve of the rich and famous.

Saturday we are going to Pittsburg Marina for their Seafood & Music Festival. On Sunday we return to Sausalito.

Roxy — 54-ft Colvin Pinky Schooner

Jack & Sean Reynolds, Oakland

Jack Reynolds and his son Sean departed Oakland's 5th Avenue Marina on July 2 for Willow Berm Marina on the Mokelumne River, where they stayed a week before sailing back. "No groundings," reported Sean, "but it did get a mite shallow in a few places, and we probably woke up some worms.

During our nice, long, hot days of no responsibilities, I made a half-moku wrap on Roxy's tiller, to give it some protection against the fittings that it sometimes hit when hard over. The hot sun dried out the varnish real quick!

— CAST TO THE WIND

IRON GENNY

Is the Delta pet-friendly? Judging by these photos, we'd have to say yes. Clockwise from top left: Colleen and Stewie of 'Iron Genny' pass the C&H Sugar plant on Carquinez Strait; "The swimming is great," said 'Resolute's Eric Kopps and his dog Roxy; Luc gets her sea legs on 'Hooked'; the chickens have got it good at Owl Harbor; 'Stewball's mascot, Peanut, made new friends at Tiki Lagun Marina; Roy Falk with TomTom and Katy in 'Stella's wheelhouse.

Resolute — Hunter 33

Jason & Eric Kopps, Richmond

Another father and son duo, Jason and Eric (age 17), and their border collie mix Roxie planned to take advantage of the Delta's always-reliable, strong summer winds to run from the Bay to Decker island via the Sacramento Deep Water Channel. There was only one problem on June 7: no wind. "We motored all the way. Two days later the wind was clocking over 30 knots," said Jason.

"We traveled Middle River for the first time – it's a beautiful area. Mildred Island was relatively bug-free. We met some very nice folks up at King Island

Marina – we arrived on a night when a large BBQ was planned, and four people (including the harbormaster) came over to invite us to join the group.

"Heavy wind restricted some of our anchoring plans, but, fortunately, Owl Harbor had a slip available."

Sonrisa — Baba 40

Greg & Kristin Torok, Redwood City

We convinced our friends from Washington state that sailing a bluewater cruiser upriver was a good idea, and they agreed to join us for a long Doo Dah weekend.

Sonrisa had a long motorsail from

Redwood City to Pittsburg on the first day. Pittsburg was a convenient place to meet our friends, and we arrived at the dock at about the same time their BART train arrived at the station. The Pittsburg Marina staff were excellent, and we took advantage of their free night at the marina for Doo Dah entries. The next day, we walked into town and topped up our provisions at the grocery store before heading into the Delta.

We had fantastic sailing up the San Joaquin. Our guests couldn't believe we were sailing upriver.

The next night we practiced our bow-stern anchoring in Potato Slough, it took a couple of tries to get Sorrisa settled into a good spot in the lee of a tule berm. We took turns soaking in the sun and swimming to cool off.

We made a stop at Korth's Pirate's Lair to pump out and get some lunch. I had never been to this marina before. As we were leaving Potato Slough, another cruiser in a dinghy motored up alongside and we started chatting. I asked about the entrance, and he described it and the layout inside. This was important – I didn't want to get a 40-ft sailboat sideways in the wrong spot.

Fortunately, when we arrived the fuel dock was empty. Sorrisa seemed to take up the entire dock. The staff at Korth's allowed us to stay there long enough to get lunch at the café. Sorrisa is a full-keel sailboat, so getting her turned around in a small area is a challenge, but we were able to get into and out of Korth's without much trouble.

From Korth's we had a short sail over to the entrance of Sevenmile Slough. Recalling the directions given during the Delta seminar at Richmond YC, we approached from the southwest and followed the instructions had Owl Harbor provided. We had such a good time there on the 2012 Doo Dah that we wanted to return. Saturday was movie night, so we claimed a picnic table to watch Slumdog Millionaire. There's something special about an outdoor community movie.

Benicia was our final stop on the way home. The charming downtown is a short walk from the marina.

Lucy — Beneteau 361 Daryl & Patty Silva, Alameda

Lucy departed Alameda on June 12, enjoyed the free Doo Dah night at Pittsburg Marina, then sailed on to Owl Harbor for the Who's in Blues party.

Once in the Delta, we were pleasantly surprised by how relaxing the swimming, fishing, warm weather and quiet can be. It's wonderful swimming off your boat in fresh water. We'd intended to stay one week but continued to commute back up to the boat in the Delta nearly every weekend for three months.

We will be going next year for sure and will bring along many other yachties from our home port, Grand Marina.

In its six years of existence, the Delta Doo Dah has never been the same twice. Exciting changes are in the works for 2015, so stay tuned to www.deltadoodah.com. For more pictures, see our photo gallery at <http://latitude38events.smugmug.com/Delta-Doo-Dah-DIY-2014>.

BAJA HA-HA MELTING POT

Check out the Ha-Ha XXI entry roster at www.baja-haha.com and you'll see that boat types and sizes in this year's fleet are as varied as ever, and you can bet that the crews who sail them are as colorful as in years past.

In addition to many first-timers, there are plenty of 'repeat offenders' who wanted to replay some of the fun and great sailing that they experienced the last time around. Some full-time Mexico cruisers even sail all the way back to San Diego each fall just to re-do the rally.

This month we'll run the second of three installments of mini-profiles of all registered crews.
Also, you'll find frequent event updates in 'Lectronic Latitude' at www.latitude38.com.

If you're new to the event, let us explain that the Ha-Ha is a 750-mile cruisers' rally from San Diego to Cabo San Lucas, with stops along the way at Turtle
Bay and Bahia Santa Maria.

BAJA HA-HA PROFILES, PART II —

"What have these people done to deserve the Latitude 38 spotlight?" you ask. It's not what they've done. It's what they are about to do.

We're saluting these sailors because they have overcome the urge to procrastinate, and are about to head south on a grand adventure: the 21st annual Baja Ha-Ha rally, from San Diego to Cabo San Lucas, October 27 - November 8.

If you read our first installment of rally profiles last month, you know that this year's fleet members come from wildly diverse backgrounds, and sail on all sorts of boats — from tricked-out racer-cruisers to bare-bones plastic classics.

They're all eager for the same sort of offshore adventures, though, as they follow the Ha-Ha's traditional track from San Diego to Bahia Tortugas (360 miles), on to Bahia Santa Maria (240 miles), and finally to Cabo San Lucas. That port was recently ravaged by Hurricane Odile, of course, but our contacts at Cabo Marina tell us they'll be ready to receive us when the fleet arrives November 6. No doubt the fleet's infusion of Ha-Ha spirit and cash will be greatly appreciated.

So let us introduce you to these adventurous members of the Baja Ha-Ha Class of 2014, listed here in the order that they registered.

Penn Station — Hylas 44 Steve Felton, Tacoma, WA

"Imagine growing up in a single-wide, and you get a Ferrari for your first car," says Steve, a 36-year-old plumbing contractor. "That's how I feel about my boat, which I love! I've planned on doing a circumnavigation for nine years now, and more knowledgeable friends told me the Ha-Ha is the best way to start." He'll have a hair stylist, Amy Canonica, 26, aboard for the Ha-Ha as one of his two crew.

"Our boat is old like we are, but with all the new stuff we've put on her, she's as young at heart as we are."

My Bonnie Karen — DownEast 38 Chris & Karen Jernigan, San Diego

Chris, 72, is a retired civil engineer, while Karen is retired from Child Protective Services. "Our boat is old like we are," they claim, "but with all the new stuff we've put on her, she's as young at heart as we are." The couple plan to sail to the Sea of Cortez and bash back next year.

Mabrouka — CT-41 Ketch Roy Neyman, Seattle, WA

Roy, 60, is a retired naval architect and project manager. "I bought my first real boat, a Cal 25, after graduating from college. I sold her 10 years later to make a down payment on my first house. What a mistake! Giving up that bit of my identity was, I think, the beginning of the end for my marriage, although it lasted 16 years. After my divorce I bought a Hobie 16, then, after moving back to the U.S. from Saudi Arabia in 1998, I bought my CT-41. I have lived aboard happily ever since, having reinvigorated my love of sailing. I'm basically a singlehander and my crew will be catch-as-catch-can, with friends, family and miscellaneous volunteers to join for the adventure." His ultimate goal is to spend a long time in the South Pacific.

A Good Day — Island Packet 485 Charlie McCullough, Oakland

Charlie, 62, is a retired technology executive who says, "I did the Ha-Ha last year with my boat and loved it. It's a great way to get south." He has three friends lined up to crew. After the Ha-Ha, Charlie plans to sail over to Puerto Vallarta.

Kailani — Island Packet 485 Rusty Frantz, Encinitas

Two IP 485s signed up in a row. Wow. Rusty, 47, who declined to give an occupation, says "I love being away from work, especially where there are margaritas at the finish line. Kailani, which I've only owned for a couple of months, is nicer than my 1968 Morgan 34 was, but there are a lot more things to break." The experienced offshore sailor will have to bash back over Christmas.

Footloose — C&C Landfall 48 Raymond Macary & Lydia Leyba Salmon, Idaho / Oakland

Raymond, 58, a retired engineer, and Lydia, a retired clerical worker, don't expect to be the first boat to finish. Not with just 'white sails' and a fixed three-bladed prop. While they haven't done much offshore sailing, the couple plan to cruise to Hawaii and Alaska following the Ha-Ha.

Korbut Rose — Hans Christian 33 Bruce Brown & Sandy Zeng Portland

'Korbut Rose'

Bruce, 59, a retired health care sales manager, and his wife say the Ha-Ha will be "the beginning of our getting back to life and nature." They've dreamed about doing it for 10 years, and particularly like the fact that the Ha-Ha gives them an exact date on which to start their "extended cruising."

Dreamcatcher — Roberts V495 Norm & Willi Facey Vancouver, BC

Norm, 59, a retired engineer, and his wife Willi, a corrosion technician, "built our boat from the ground up with our own hands, then launched her last year. She's capable and beautiful." The duo have done Vancouver to Hawaii, and sailed all around Vancouver Island, but this will be the first trip with their new boat. "We've been waiting our whole life to meet the 2014 Ha-Ha group." They'll Puddle Jump to New Zealand in 2015.

Tranquilo — Catalina C445 Lloyd & Colleen Clauss Huntington Beach / Ensenada

Lloyd, 75, a retired engineer, says "It's time to do the Ha-Ha once again." He's done it three times, and other crewmembers have done it a total of six times. "The Catalina C445 is a brand new design that is equipped for Ha-Ha fun in the sun," says Lloyd. "We launched her in September of last year, and did this year's Newport to Ensenada Race — which had gusts to 40 knots. Once I get down south, I may stay there."

Fainche — Catalina 34 Robert Frost, Alameda / Redding

Robert, 61, a retired forest ranger, did the 2006 and 2013 Ha-Ha's, and one Bash back. But he's always wanted to do it on his own boat, and this is his year to do it. Christian Holm, a still-active air tanker pilot, will crew for him. Robert plans to be in La Paz for Christmas, but isn't sure after that.

LATITUDE ARCHIVES

Northern Winds — Beneteau 50
Carmine Perticcone & Gail Scarlett Coronado

Carmine, 65, a retired Southwest Airlines pilot, and Gail, still active as an administrative assistant, recently switched from racing to cruising. With no flight dispatcher to tell them where to go, they might end up in the Sea, or Hawaii, or bashing back home. We once had a Southwest Airlines pilot do the Ha-Ha aboard Profligate. Those pilots know a million jokes.

Speakeasy — Manta 42 Cat
Mark & Deanna Roozendaal
Victoria, BC

'Speakeasy'

Mark, 49, a retired Realtor, and Deanna, a fundraiser, were delayed at the start of the 2005 Ha-Ha with engine problems "but still placed first in our division. This time we're ready to go with two hulls, two engines, and an additional crewmember. This marks the second time we've abandoned our jobs, homes, and normal lives on land for adventures under sail. Speakeasy is our new home, and we're headed across the Pacific to Australia."

Serenity — Hunter Passage 42
Greg & Carma Foulger
Mesa, AZ

Greg, 61, still working as an electrical engineer, and Carma agree with Helen Keller that 'life is either a daring adventure or nothing at all.' "We don't know

After years of dreaming and months of preparation, the Ha-Ha fleet heads south to new adventures in the sunny latitudes of Mexico.

if the Ha-Ha will be that daring, but it should be an adventure for us. We may keep the boat in Mexico and later head to Florida via the Canal in 2015. Or we may bash home."

Myzella — Beneteau Oceanis 37
Glenn Smith & Laura Lewis
Chula Vista

Glenn, 64, a retired warehouse superintendent, and friend Laura, a still-active real estate appraiser, are relatively new sailors looking for "sailing challenges and adventures" beyond Catalina. They should find them, particularly with a new asymmetrical spinnaker. They have no set plans after the Ha-Ha.

Blue Peter — Tosca 39
Jim & Leigh Terbush
Manitou Springs, CO / M. del Rey

Jim, 62, is a retired physician, while Leigh is a retired nurse. They have already done long passages with their boat: Cape Town to Buenos Aires, 37 days. Buenos Aires to Trinidad, 52 days. Trinidad to Key West, 11 days. "We think it will be more fun and safer to cruise to Cabo in the company of other boats," they say. "We're not sure what we'll do after the Sea of Cortez.

Who knows what 'Blue Peter' refers to in sailing?

Scout — Rawson 30
Garrett & Ruth Jolly
Los Osos / Morro Bay

Garrett, 22, a retired bartender, and Ruth, jokingly described as a "wine-o", report that it's been "four years and six boats since we've dropped the hook in tropical waters, and that's too long." Scout is now 50 years old. "But she's not a piece of crap like the boat we sailed on in the 2010 Ha-Ha, which didn't have an engine, running water, head, self-steering or icebox."

'Scout'

Spring Fever — Morgan 382
Sherri Wilkinson & Don Scott
Tiburon / Santa Rosa

Sherri, a personal fitness trainer, is one of the few women boatowners in this year's Ha-Ha. She has previously cruised across the Pacific. Her friend Don, a retired electrician, says going cruising "is a retirement gift to ourselves, and we don't plan on looking back."

'Spring Fever'

Fast Reorg — Hunter HC 50
Ron Orr & Themis Glatman
Marina del Rey

Ron, 67, is a retired attorney and active Coast Guard-licensed captain who has owned his boat for 13 years. He did both the Pacific Cup and Ha-Ha in 2002, and earlier this year made the 1,500-mile trip from the BVIs to Newport. "Fast Reorg is a fast downwind boat that should be fun in the Ha-Ha," he says. "After a couple of months in the Sea of Cortez, I'll bash back to California."

Touchstone — Valiant 40
Gordon Wedman & Bill Gabor
Vancouver, British Columbia

Gordon, 63, is a retired occupation health and safety consultant who describes himself as a "lazy skipper". We suppose that means Bill Gabor, 65, his crew, a retired tower crane operator, will have to do most of the work. The Dalton family did the Ha-Ha with the boat in 2001 when she was named Aristos. Wedman had her shipped back to B.C. for a refit. She'll be kept on the hard next summer, then continue on after that.

Sereno II — Hunter 21
Gary & Cindy Cairns
San Diego

Gary, 56, a retired electrician, and Cindy, a retired IT professional, are new liveaboards who see the Ha-Ha as a good introduction to cruising Mexico. "Let's kick the tires, light the fire, and go!" It's not an entirely nautical metaphor, but we understand their enthusiasm. Friend Richard Scapher will join them as crew.

Blessed Life — Catalina 42 Mk II
Bob Bahlman & Margie Hewes
Incline Village, Nevada

Bob, 65, a retired fire captain, has done two Ha-Ha's, while Margie, a retired social services worker, has done one. "If you've done one," they say, "why wouldn't you do more?" After the Ha-Ha, they plan on continuing to Panama, the Caribbean, the East Coast, and the Great Lakes.

Dulcinea — Hinckley 42
Sou'Wester
Scott & Kathleen Clapp
San Francisco / Hamilton City
Scott, 54, is an engineer, while Kathleen is a business executive. They're both still working, but say this will be the start of their cruising life. "Our current plan is to leave the boat in Mexico as a second home, then later do a Puddle Jump and continue across the Pacific." There aren't many Hinckleys on the West Coast, but they are a top choice in the Northwest.

'Dulcinea'

Destiny — DeFever 49 Euro
Kyle & Christine Hunter
Newport Beach

Kyle, 65, a retired small-business owner, and wife Christine say "Our boat was chosen and outfitted specifically to make the trip from the PNW through the Panama Canal, continuing to the East Coast of the USA. From there, we plan to complete the Great Loop and circumnavigate the Caribbean. Initially we planned on doing the FUBAR in 2015, but after retiring we agreed that we would be wasting a year messing around SoCal, and decided that there were many advantages to participating in the 2014 Ha-Ha."

Serenity — Catalina 42 Mk II
David Albert & Mike Cobas
Oceanside

David, 65, is a real estate broker who did the 2004 and 2007 Ha-Ha's, while friend Mike Cobas, 64, ex-law enforcement, did the 2010 Ha-Ha. "A lot of other Oceanside YC members are going south — and staying there," says Dave. "I love the electricity of everybody getting ready to cast off the docklines, no matter if it's their first time or their 20th time. The anticipation is contagious!"

Dragon's Toy — Island Packet 37
Tom Kohrs & Cary Purvis
Freeport, CA

Tom, 61, a retired electronics engineer, did the 2006 Ha-Ha as crew and the 2008 and 2010 Ha-Ha's on his own boat. His wife Cary, a retired high school principal, has done two Ha-Ha's. We last saw these two enthusiastic sailors and their boat in St. Martin in 2012. "We've done 17,000 cruising miles since the 2010 Ha-Ha, and we're doing another because the Sea of Cortez is still our favorite cruising ground."

'Dragon's Toy'

Poetry — Blue Jacket 40
Bobby Pryor, San Diego

Bob, 56, a still-active attorney, bought this new Island Packet performance cruiser just a couple of months ago, but will have Scott Self, 64, be the captain. Self has sailed across the Atlantic twice, done two Fastnet Races, and was on a division-winning Transpac boat a few years back.

Aesclepius — Bruce Roberts 50
Donna and Cliff Carter
Edmonton, Alberta, Canada

Cliff, 67, a still-practicing ear, nose and throat surgeon, and his wife Donna, a business manager, have both been sailing for nearly 30 years, but mostly coastal stuff. "Going as part of a group gives us a greater sense of security," they say. The couple plan to leave the boat in La Paz for several years. They also admit that the name 'Aesclepius' gives a lot of people trouble. Pronounced uh-SKLEE-pee-uhs, he is the god of medicine and healing in Greek mythology.

Mariah — Seawind 1000
Guillermo Stein & Fernando Gutierrez
Puerto Vallarta, Mexico

'Billy', 54, a still-active CFO, bought the cat just a few months ago. His friends Fernando, 46, an architect, and Alejandro Echeverria, 56, in finance, will be crewing for him. The boat has already sailed from La Paz to Alaska, but the 'tres amigos' will be bringing her down to her new home of Puerto Vallarta.

Flibbertigibbet — Catalina 42 Mk II
Betty & Jim Adams, Discovery Bay

Betty is a retired sailmaker who did the 2010 and 2013 Ha-Ha's. Her husband Jim, 70, is a polygraph examiner, so nobody'd better tell any lies about their finishing times. This will be the couple's fourth Ha-Ha, having done two previous ones in their O'Day 37. They did the Baja Bash this spring specifically to be able to do the 2014 Ha-Ha.

'Flibbertigibbet'

Spirit of Adventure — Islander 34
Don Stoutenger, Long Beach

Don, 69, a retired science teacher, says, "I've been preparing for this event for 50 years!" He will be joined by his son Jason, 42. Don has sailed from Hawaii to San Francisco, done a lot of sailing to Catalina and the other Channel Islands, and just completed a 250-mile singlehanded nonstop trip from Long Beach to Santa Barbara Island to San Nicholas Island to San Clemente island and home. He was preparing for possibly singlehanded to the South Pacific or Hawaii.

'Spirit of Adventure'

Stochastic — Panda 40
Tom & Kelly Miller
Alameda

Tom, 45, is "Undecided" on his occupation, as is his wife Kelly. Sophie, their 10-year old daughter, makes Stochastic a 'kid boat'. "Monte Cristo, our small white fluffy dog, knows his occupation — growler at everything, biter of nothing," they say. "We may be geese, headed south for the winter, or the Ha-Ha may just be the first leg of a very, very long vacation." Seems appropriate for a boat name that means "involving a random variable."

Joyride — J/109

James & Jennifer Vickers
San Francisco / San Jose

Jim, 50, is a still-active physicist/EE, while Jennifer is a still-active therapist. "We both turned 50 this year, and December will be our 25th anniversary," they say, "so we have to do something big! We've basically 'cruised out' a J/109 and are doing the Ha-Ha with a fellow racing couple — Mike and Cindy Meloy — from the Singlehanded Sailing Society, and our two mini schnauzers." This is going to be one well-sailed Ha-Ha boat.

Meet the 'Joyride' crew.

Bon Voyage — Hunter 49
Craig & Carol Fecker, San Diego

Craig, 64, is the retired owner of Cruising Yacht, Inc, while Carol is a retired 5th grade teacher. "This is the beginning of an adventure with no itinerary and no schedule," they say. "We've sold our home, put everything in storage, and have no idea where we'll go or when we'll return. It's going to be one day at a time."

'Bon Voyage'

FastAlley — Williams 41 Tri
Julia Brown
Wilmington / Encino

Julia is an IT manager who is still working. Her friend Annie DeLong will be one of those crewing for her on what, like Talion, will be all-women boat. "We're old enough to know better, but young enough to do it anyway," says

'FastAlley'

Julia. The boat has sailed up and down the California coast under Brown's ownership, but won't be doing that anymore as she's heading to Panama for good.

Silver Sea — Catalina 38
John & Ofelia Alvarado Gingold
San Diego

John, 66, is a musician and former recording engineer, while Ofelia is still working as a public health official. "After a 15-year hiatus, we're going cruising again," they write. "The Ha-Ha started after we got home, but we made a mental a note to do it someday. Our current boat sails as well as our old Cal 39, but has a roomier salon. Our cruising plans are open-ended."

Norske Dame — Formosa 41
Richard Simpson
Long Beach / Downey

Richard, 63, a retired stagehand, will be accompanied by Rhonda Rowley, a nurse who is also his fiancée. "Rhonda is my first Norske Dame," says Richard, "but when I saw my boat, it was love at first sight." Retired fireman Craig Smith will round out the crew for the Ha-Ha. After Cabo, they plan to just keep going.

'Silver Sea'

Beach Access — Lagoon 380
Glenn Twitchell & Debbie Jahn
Newport Beach

Glenn, 58, has done four out of the last five Ha-Ha's, three times as skipper of Beach Access. Debbie, an accountant, has done three Ha-Ha's. "We have perfected the formula for having fun." Crewing for them will be Debbie's son Christopher, and Lila Shaked, who did several years across the Pacific in their Hans Christian 33. "After the Ha-Ha, Beach Access will stay in Mexico for the foreseeable future, as we have no plans to bash back again."

'Beach Access'

BAJA HA-HA PROFILES, PART II —

Brown Sugar — Lancer 36

Don & Crystal Quinly

Stockton Sailing Club / Manteca

Don, 55, is still working as a building contractor, while Crystal 'the Admiral' is the team lead on a nuclear regulatory commission. Don's brother Patrick will be one of the crew. "Money can't buy you happiness," they say, "but it can buy you a yacht big enough to pull up next to it."

The Quinlys are doing the rally because "life needs to be lived". If only a little, as they'll start b a s h i n g home a week after getting to Cabo.

'Brown Sugar'

Rosebud — Cal 36

Greg & Amy Rodgers, San Pedro

Greg, 60, who continues to work as an emergency room nurse, was a skipper in the 2010 Ha-Ha. He'll be joined by his wife Amy and his son Buddy, 31, a Green Beret. Rosebud is hull #1 of the Cal 36s, and won her division in the 1966 Transpac. The boat has made separate trips to Hawaii, the Marquesas, and New Zealand, although Greg's longest trip has been Los Angeles to Puerto Vallarta and Los Angeles to Cabo. After the Ha-Ha, they've have to 'turn and burn'.

Gold Dust — Islander 44

James Clark, San Diego

James, 71, a retired millwright, has already sailed to Cabo three times. He followed in the path of the 2012 Ha-Ha, and later singlehanded back from La Paz. This year he has an "excited crew." They had promised each other to sail in the Ha-Ha at least once. After the Ha-Ha, the boat will be kept in La Paz for one year, then brought back north. "There are two rules on Gold Dust. 1) You must be safe and have fun. 2) There are no other rules."

Sea Escape — Catalina 42 Mk II

Kelvin Phillips & Anthony Adams
Berkeley / Danville

Kelvin, 67, is still working as a purchasing director, while Anthony, 78, is the retired vice president of a company. "Sail fast, live slow, go with the flow" is the boat motto. Kelvin says cruising has been a lifelong dream of his, and that the time is right and the boat is ready. The plan is to base the boat out of La Paz for several years.

Apropos — Hans Christian 43T

James Shutt & Karen Wong
Seattle, WA

James, 51, is still working as an electrical engineer, while his wife Karen continues to work as a pediatric anesthesiologist. Their daughter, Jacintha, 7, will be an important part of the crew. The family decided to enter the Ha-Ha because "of the amount of useful information and the safety in traveling in numbers." They'll also be participating in the Cojo Ho-Ho, which is a feeder event from the Pacific Northwest independent of the Ha-Ha.

"We plan on laughing all the way from Seattle to Cabo." Then they plan to do the Pacific Puddle Jump.

LIVIN' THE DREAM

Ranidan — Hallberg Rassy 40
James & Linda Noval
Portland / Beaverton, OR

James, 68, is a technology manager, while his wife Linda is a psychologist. "The Ha-Ha will be a great way to kick off our travels, and make new friends with a similar interest," they say. James has considerable offshore experience, having sailed from the BVIs to the Azores, from Sweden to Germany and England, and from Key West to Annapolis. "After the Ha-Ha, we'll continue south to Costa Rica and Panama, and later transit the Canal and head to the BVI."

Patricia Belle — 82-ft Schooner
Patrick & Jeann Hughes
Seattle, WA / Mazatlan

Pat. 66, is a retired shipwright with a 500-ton USCG license, while his wife Jeann is a nurse. They both did the 2005, 2006, 2011 and 2012 Ha-Ha's with their distinctive wood schooner. Caleb, 31, their merchant-marine AB son, did the 2011 and 2012 Ha-Ha's.

"Patricia Belle is a traditional wood schooner, designed for cargo and sail training. This summer we particiipated in the ASTA Tall Ship Challenge for the West Coast. We welcome veteran sailors as well as those who desire to experience life at sea. We LOVE the Baja Ha-Ha, and think it's the most fun way to start our winter cruise to Acapulco.

"We will cruise Mexico, and plan to sail to Hawaii for the summer before returning to Southern California in time for the 2015 Ha-Ha."

The couple have sailed Patricia Belle from the East Coast of the U.S. to Valparaiso, Chile, and made 12 crossings between the mainland and Hawaii.

Victoria — Pacific Seacraft 34
John Enders & Cass Sinclair
Anacortes, WA / Talent, OR

John, 62, is a retired and "recovering journalist", while Cass is a still-active entrepreneur. Enders has sailed up and down the West Coast between Puget Sound and San Diego, but notes he's never been able to use the swim ladder at the back of the boat. "It's time to change that," he says. John correctly sees the Ha-Ha as a great opportunity to make new cruising friends. He and Cass are undecided where they will go after the Ha-Ha.

Allocco, 62, an engineer, while the wives watch the homefront. "I believe the Ha-Ha will help me discover what I should do with the second half of my life," laughs Peters, who believes "a wonderful Ha-Ha experience will encourage me to do the Pacific Puddle Jump." While a J/120 might not strike most as a cruising boat, Peters has owned her for 10 years, and having already sailed to Hawaii and Puerto Vallarta, knows about offshore sailing.

Aussie Rules — Catalina 34

Dave & Rose Hayes
Gabriola Island, BC

Dave, 52, a still-employed transportation maintenance manager, and Rose, a still-active phlebotomist, "are about sailing hard, having fun, and making new friends with like-minded people." Dave has done a lot of sailing in Australia, and the couple — like a lot of Aussies — plan to sail to Oz and sell their boat. Unlike most others, however, they plan to fly back to BC, work for five years while they build a cottage, and buy a bigger boat. In other words, this is the first step in their plan to live a 'six and six' life.

SeaOtter — Freedom 30 Klaus Kutz & Jennifer Rader Alameda

Klaus, 66, a retired yacht broker, has lots of offshore experience: Sailed to Hawaii in 1991 and 1998, to Mexico in 1981 and 2005, and from Italy to Croatia and back in 2004. His plans are to sail to La Cruz and base the Gary Mull design there. "My boat isn't very big, but she's very easy to sail, very quick, and very nimble. For her size, she offers great comfort and accommodations. She's the perfect pocket cruiser for someone who is old but young at heart."

Friday — Hunter 31 Jared Owen, Seattle, WA

Jared, 32, is a Microsoft software engineer, while Amanda Morrison, his girlfriend/crew, is a grade-school teacher. Both must be playing hooky. Jared's mom Jill, a real estate broker, will be along in case they find anything interesting to buy in Mexico. Having started sailing four years ago, Jared and Amanda were going to Mexico anyway, so they joined the Ha-Ha to be with like-minded people. "It was recommended by Howard Edson, who did last year's Ha-Ha. "We have new sails in preparation for the upwind trip home."

'Friday'

We'll take a break here. Look for the final installment in November, and a recap of the rally in December. If you missed part one of these profiles, you can read it online at www.latitude38.com.

Apdo. Postal 290, La Paz, 23000
 Baja California Sur, Mexico

Even without Marge Simpson's twin sisters, the Department of Motor Vehicles is one of the innermost circles of Hades. My visits to the dentist are far more enjoyable. But about once every decade the state needs a new photo of me and a new vision test, and the DMV had no scheduled appointments to offer before my license expired.

That is how I came to be waiting in a long and slow-moving line to find out which other long and slow-moving line I should be waiting in. I was looking longingly over at the shorter and faster-moving line for people lucky enough to have appointments, when a familiar face

(National Association of State Boating Law Administrators) were in the boating industry's pocket."

"I remember that," I said as I impatiently nudged forward, even though the line had not moved an inch. "RBOC usually opposes anything that's the least bit inconvenient to boaters. Why were they pushing the boating license back then?"

"My theory is that, like, powerboat sales were at an all-time low, but kayaks, outriggers, surfskis and especially the new SUPs were doing okay. The industry money wanted to make sure that if gas-guzzling thrillcraft took a regulatory hit, then we human-powered and wind-powered hippies would have to take the same hit. And then they exempted rented jet skis and houseboats, just to remove any doubt about who was writing this stuff..."

"Lee, did you make up that word 'thrillcraft' for those hearings?"

"Heck no. There's a book by that title, and the word even is used in the Hawaii civil code."

Lee's line was moving, and she was almost out of easy conversation range.

"Gotta work the system," she said over her shoulder as she moved up another place, almost to the counter. "Catch you later."

I eventually got to the counter at the head of my line, only to find out that I had filled out the wrong form. I was given the correct form to fill out and bring back to a different line, all this before I could even wait in the right line for my vision check and photo.

Lee also had to wait, but it was for a seat in the exam area, so I detoured over to her line to discuss world politics.

"I heard that they're trying again with the boating license thing," I said. "And it's already passed both houses."

"Yes, SB 941," she said, being one step ahead of me with her web-browsing phone. "Went to the Governor's desk on August 28. Let's take a peek at what it says..."

Lee had the actual text of the new law on her giant new smartphone screen in another few seconds.

"This bill would prohibit the operation of a vessel that is propelled by an engine," she read, "in the waters of the state except by a person who is in possession of a valid vessel operator card."

"That's a relief," I remarked. "I gather it only applies to powerboats this time around. No complaints from me. Maybe they feel more confident about leaving paddlers and sailors alone, now that stink-pot sales are back on the upswing."

"Gotta read these things carefully," Lee advised as she scanned the document. "In most states, you only need a card if engine horsepower is 15 or more. This one looks like it goes right down to zero, so the card will be required even on a sailboat with a two-hamster outboard."

"And it would include electric-powered boats too," I surmised, "if their definition of 'engine' includes electric motors. But I'm still not complaining — you can do a lot of damage even with a small outboard, and anything that discourages auxiliary power as a crutch, and pushes new sailors back to relying on wind, oars and anchors, is a good move as I see it."

"For sure, that part looks okay to me too," Lee allowed as she studied the text. "But if the same special interests are pulling the strings as last time around... Hah! Here it is: Rentals are like, completely exempt! Totally! Even the old SB 1451 required a ten-minute safety briefing and a temporary certificate before you could rent a jet ski. This bill even drops that requirement, flimsy as it may have been. It's another reincarnation of the Reckless Jet Ski Driver Protection Act."

"I saw way too many people hurt in accidents caused mostly by too much speed and power."

"I think you mean 'personal watercraft' or 'PWC,'" said an older gentleman who was waiting in a different line that seemed to cross right through the line of people waiting near the testing area. "Jet ski is a registered trademark of Kawasaki Corporation."

He was wearing one of those Greek fisherman's caps and carried a briefcase with an anchor embossed on the flap.

"It's a living language, dude!" Lee responded. "Jet ski is in the dictionary. Get over it!"

It turned out that this particular

The most effective way to make boating safer is to divert people away from thrillcraft and into sail and paddle-powered boats.

came into view.

"Lee!" I hailed. "What are you doing here? You don't even drive."

"Road trip to Baja with my windsurfing buds," she explained. "And like, they think I should do some of the driving this year."

"Sounds fair enough," I said. "Did you cram for the written test?"

"As tests go, it's like, comic relief compared to my Ph.D. quals," she remarked dismissively.

"Well, you still have to pass to get a license," I reminded her. "And the state isn't done with you yet. You'll have to do this again in a couple of years for a boating license."

"I thought we beat that one back," Lee sighed. "It was SB 1458. It would have required everyone, even kayakers, to pass a test and get some kind of hokey boating license. I mean, that might be a good thing for some of the brain donors running around in powerboats, except that, you guessed it, it left a gaping exception for rental jet skis. It was pretty clear that the RBOC (Recreational Boaters of California) and even NASBLA member of the Language Police (Trademark Division) had recently retired from a career as a harbor patrol officer on a lake in the northern part of the state. He had moved to the Bay Area and bought a sailboat, and was trying to figure out which line to wait in to get it registered.

"She has a point about our living language," I said after apologizing to our new acquaintance. "But you know, some things just have to be filed under Lost Causes and Pointless Pedantry."

"Actually I do agree with you on the issue," he allowed. "In all my years patrolling the lake, I saw way too many people hurt in accidents caused mostly by too much speed and power. Leaving a blanket exemption for all rental boats is dangerous.

"What were they thinking?" asked Lee.

"Some rental companies are actually responsible and are self-policing," he explained. "They don't want their insurance to go up or their equipment to be damaged, and that must be what the writers of SB 941 are relying on.

"But it's still a conflict of interest," I pointed out, "to let an entity that's taking money from the user decide if the user is qualified."

"Just like DMV," Lee added. "But, like, at least DMV makes me pass a standard test."

"So what kind of questions are going to be on the test to get this new Boater Education Card?" I asked. "Think it's going to be hard enough to actually filter out some yahoos?"

"First they should see if people know that a 'boater' is a kind of hat, not a person who operates a boat," said the language cop.

"That pesky living language thing again," said Lee.

"Here, you can take a peek at some sample questions," he said as he pulled some papers from his briefcase and passed one of them to Lee. "I just happen to have a sample boating safety class here."

"No crib sheets!" scolded the DMV exam monitor, who must have thought we were giving Lee some last-minute answers to the driver's license written test.

MEDIA ENTERTAINMENT TV

Speed kills, especially with jet skis. Such 'PWCs' account for a disproportionately large number of watersports injuries and deaths.

Lee handed the paper back to me and I read some of the questions out loud:

"When a storm hits while a vessel is underway, the operator should do which of the following? A) Take waves from the port or starboard side, never head on. B) Ensure that all those onboard are wearing a Personal Flotation Device. C) Keep all electrical equipment plugged in even if lightning is present. D) Shift all passengers to the highest point onboard the boat."

Most of the questions were on that level, except for a few that seemed to have no clear right answer, especially to people who know the subject well. Lee had a lot of trouble with the one that asks the direction from which bad weather comes — Lee had examples to the contrary for almost every point of the compass.

"Am I going to have to take this test next year? I asked.

"Max, you have 'till 2025," Lee informed me after another quick scan of the text on her phone. "Gradual phase-in depending on age. Me, I'll have to get the certificate by 2019."

"More to the point," I asked the retired harbor patrol officer, "is there any hard data that even suggests that requiring a certificate improves boating safety?"

"A few years ago," he explained, "NASBLA compared the accident rates in states that had some kind of mandatory boating education law with those that didn't. California's boating fatality rate was 5.46 per 100,000 boats, but in all the states that had mandatory boating education in place for 20 years or more, the accident rate is only 4.03 per 100,000, a risk reduction of 26%."

"I looked at that study when we were debating SB 1451," recalled Lee. "And, like, if you lift the hood and look at the actual data, you see that they pulled a fast one with the stats. They averaged in Alaska and Wyoming, clear outliers with high fatality rates that probably have nothing to do with boating education or lack of it. These are two states with small boating populations, no mandatory education, and some very remote and hazardous boating environments. The big distortion was that, despite the small populations, the report averaged in those high-risk states with equal weighting as the big states. If they weighted the average correctly, adjusting for each state's population, the results would be much less positive for boating education."

"So you think the mandatory education is ineffective?"

"Can't tell from the actual data. Florida, a state with a large year-round boating population and a mix of inland and open-water boating similar to California's, has a higher fatality rate (6.41) despite implementing a mandatory program in 1991."

"Maybe it's because there are more fast powerboats in Florida?" I suggested.

"Well duh! It's speed that kills, not whether you can pass an easy test. The effect of the mandatory education gets lost in the noise."

"Here's another bit of data you'll enjoy," said the retired officer. "A few years ago the State compiled some stats for boating accidents involving different types of boats, graphed as the rate of reportable accidents per hour of operation. It shows that PWCs are about 24 times as likely to be in a reported accident, per hour of use, as canoes or kayaks."

"I like it!" exclaimed Lee. Maybe the best way to improve recreational boating safety is to get people out of thrillcraft and into paddlecraft or sailboats. Not that this really basic test is going to do that. We'll need a carbon tax and maybe even a thrill tax for that."

"There's always someone on the margin," I suggested. "But it's not going to reverse the trend. Powerboat sales are on their way back up, according to a graph I saw in an industry magazine." I remembered just enough info for Lee to bring up the graph on her phone, after a quick search.

"Gosh, they sure know how to make the depths of a slump look like an up-market," said Lee. "That's an industry mag for you. I mean, like, read the axis labels carefully. This is the 'year-on-year percent change,' not the actual number of boats sold. For the whole first half of the graph, sales were still in negative territory compared to the previous year. Look, here's another graph that actually shows where the business is right now. Maybe not circling the drain anymore, but you can't call a 10% gain an 'up-swing' after a 60% plummet."

Finally there was a desk for Lee in the exam-taking area, so she was off to take the written test. I chatted a while longer with the retired harbor patrol officer, and learned that his new boat was a big, heavy double-ender based on a century-old design. Exactly the opposite of the muscle boats he had spent much of his career extracting injured boaters from the wreckage of.

"Gaff rig or Marconi?" I asked.

"I think you mean 'jib-headed,'" he answered. "Marconi rig' only refers to how the mast is stayed, meaning it has no separate topmast spar and one or more sets of spreaders below the hounds. A Marconi rig can still have a gaff."

"Another one for the Lost Causes and Pointless Pedantry file," I thought to myself.

"What I really like about these older designs is the full keel and attached rudder — no chance of the rudder cavitating at a large heel angle, like on some of the spade-rudder boats I've sailed in heavy air on the Bay."

"I think you mean 'ventilating,' not 'cavitating,'" Lee shouted back from her seat in the exam area.

Jazz Cup Fun and Funk

We'd love to be able to report that this year's Jazz Cup was nothing but a sun-drenched fun-fest, in which more than 100 boats were swept upstream by excellent breeze and a strong flood current to a charming destination with a bustling raft-up and hopping post-race party at the yacht club.

It was all those things, for sure. But most racers might not even be aware of the dark cloud cast by a scoring controversy. The trouble all started when an inflatable mark drifted off-station.

The non-spinnaker and slowest boats were the first to start August 30's race from Treasure Island to Benicia Yacht Club. The fastest boats and multihulls brought up the rear. This sort of reverse-order starting sequence is a great way to run a long-distance destination race. The slow boats have a chance to finish at a reasonable hour, and the arrivals are buoy helps to keep the sailboats away from the Richmond Long Wharf, where the big tankers dock to fill their holds.

"My favorite part of the race was beating Richard vonEhrenkrook's Cal 20 Can O'Whoopass to Point Pinole," said fellow Cal 20 sailor Marcus Choy. "At the Richmond Long Wharf, he got swept into the mark in the flood. He hit it twice and had to do penalty turns. The fleet caught up to me at Point Pinole."

The configuration of the finish is a box, with an inflatable leeward mark (A) and a reaching mark (B) turning the boats from their run down Carquinez Strait to an upwind finish off a wharf in Benicia. But, after the first 16 or so boats finished, the race committee noticed that Mark A had dragged up toward the Benicia Bridge. An unknown number of boats rounded the mark in its new position.

Richard vonEhrenkrook said that his Can O'Whoopass was seven minutes ahead of Marcus Choy's Green Dragon going into Mark A. "Everyone was rounding the temporary, which had drifted 300 yards east. Everyone was passing or rounding both marks correctly, to port."

Can rounded with a perennial Jazz Cup winner, the Kastrops' Catalina 30 Goose, but beat them to the finish by playing the shallow water on the north side of the course. The Cal parked on the second dock, where the boats in that division rafted up.

After Can rounded, a crash boat came out to move the wayward mark back to its correct position.

Marcus Choy was in the dining room at the club when he was told about redress possibly being offered. A group was gathered in front of the yacht club building, on the side away from the water. "You gave your sail number," said Choy. "They

The course only has a few marks. A red buoy east of Alcatraz serves as a windward mark so that the race can begin with a short upwind leg. Another red asked, 'How fast is your boat?' I have a Cal 20, so it's a slow boat. 'Where was the mark when you rounded it?' The club's boat had just picked up the buoy but hadn't moved it yet. Richard had already rounded and made a long tack into shore. Some boats in our division would have rounded after the mark was back on station. It was because of those that I requested the redress."

Milt Smith, Club Race Officer for co-host South Beach YC, confirmed that the protest committee interviewed skippers of boats seeking redress to find out where the mark was when they rounded.

After he was interviewed, Marcus Choy went down to Green Dragon for a nap, then back up to the club, where he saw he'd been put in first place for Division E. He wrote a letter to Milt Smith on September 1 saying that Richard was affected but didn't know about the redress. "I didn't think it was fair," said Marcus. "It was almost arbitrary. I almost consider it a non-race."

Most of the racers, including vonEhrenkrook, never heard about the redress until the deadline for protests had passed and the results were posted. "The Sailing Instructions put the onus on the racers to check the board for protests and so forth," he admitted. But no one came down to the docks or worked the crowd out back to notify the sailors still gathered there enjoying the warm evening. "They were handing out time like it was Halloween candy," quipped vonEhrenkrook. Nine boats received time varying from 10 to 30 minutes based on the position of the mark at the time they rounded and their PHRF rating.

Also affected by the redress issue was Dan Alvarez, who sailed an excellent race on his JS9000 JetStream. "The impact of the redress that was given to Tupelo Honey bumped them to first in division and first monohull overall," said Alvarez. Gerard Sheridan's Elan 40 was given 20 minutes of redress. "Tupelo Honey was given a finish time equivalent to JetStream's. However they were probably about 1.5 miles behind us. I've made clear the impossibility of that redress being fair, but it has gone into deaf ears. Additionally, for them to finish 'near us' they would have had to round the mark with us. When we rounded, the mark was on station, in which case they shouldn't have been a candidate for redress." Alvarez has filed an appeal with US Sailing.

"It was a perfect day – perfect wind, perfect current," Milt Smith summed up, "So this was really unfortunate."

Hannig Cup

The ninth annual Hannig Cup was held on Wednesday, August 27, in conjunction with Sequoia YC's Wednesday night Beer Can Race series.

Club member Ted Hannig created the event in 2006 when his birthday happened to coincide with a Wednesday night race. He dubbed it 'the give something back race' to honor the boating tradition of helping others. Years later his friends named it the Hannig Cup in his honor.

The race had a pirate and treasure theme, and participants won 'booty' to donate for charity. All dinner proceeds went to the SeqYC Youth Sailing Program, as the cost of the meal was donated by Black Mountain Properties and Joe Sparky Bullock.

The pursuit race had a staggered start based on PHRF. The conditions were typical for the series, with 10-12 knot winds at the start line in the Port of Redwood City turning basin. Course

#2 sent the fleet on a 7.44-mile sail out the channel, around marker #12, and back to the start/finish line. The higher PHRF boats started just after 6:00 p.m., with the faster sport-boats starting nearly 20 minutes later.

The race out the Redwood Creek Channel ensures both a good workout on the winches and a chance to exercise just about every right-of-way rule there is, from continuing obstructions, overlap, overtaking, port/starboard tacking, windward/leeward situations, and room at the mark calls, as 50 boats beat back and forth to get out the channel and into the Bay.

The wind is usually fresher in the Bay, and this night was no exception. Winds from the northwest gusted to just over 20 knots as the fleet rounded mark #12 and headed back to the channel. An ebb current throughout the race posed some additional challenges on the way back. The final leg was filled with color as spinnakers popped and the boats converged on the finish line.

Probably the biggest challenge of the night, however, was not to the racers, who all finished without incident. The VIP boat, temporarily distracted by an equipment issue, ran aground just outside the channel. One person on the boat noted, "You know you are in trouble when you throw out the anchor and the flukes are still visible." The party back at the club was starting to heat up while all the VIPs were stranded in the channel! Finally Sequoia sent a shoreboat out to gather the crew, including Ted (Dread Pirate) Hannig, and bring them up to the club until the tide rose again and the boat could be sailed off the mud.

There are two trophies – one for speed and one for the most dollars raised by a real or virtual sailboat. The J/29 L20 won the race, skippered by junior member Chris Huang with a crew that had learned to race together on that very boat through the Peninsula Youth Sailing Foundation (PYSF). Second went to John Graves' Catalina 42 Metridium, and third to Jeff Phillips' Express 27 Magic. The virtual boat Go Now, which raised the most money back at the club, was 'skippered' by Larry Mayne.

"We boaters realize how interdependent we are on the environment and each other," said Hannig. "This event allows us to express our appreciation and give back while having fun – and now youth and other charities look forward to our help each year."

The Hannig Cup has distributed more than $2.5 million over the years to local and international charities, with special emphasis given to youth and water-related charitable organizations.

Great SF Schooner Race

September 6 proved to be the prefect day for the Great San Francisco Schooner Race, hosted by SFYC. Eleven boats in Gaff and Marconi divisions competed in the Bay tour pursuit race. The course took the schooners from Knox to Yellow Bluff, toward Treasure Island for the Blossom Rock mark rounding, onward to the East Bay to round YRA Mark 8, around Angel Island to starboard, to Little Harding, and back to Knox for the amazing finishes.

Martha had the fastest elapsed time of 1 hour, 40 minutes, 43 seconds, and secured second place, finishing a mere three seconds behind Elizabeth Muir in the Marconi division. Jakatan finished first in the Gaff division, with Yankee in second. Brigadoon and Freda B were in hot pursuit of Yankee as they headed to the finish line.

This was the first year Martha competed in the race. The oldest living flagship of the SFYC, she was built in 1907 for the club's commodore, J. R. Hanify, and named after his wife. Martha is a B. B. Crowninshield design built at W. F. Stone Boat Yard in San Francisco. She's 68-ft on deck and 84-ft sparred.

Since 1996, Martha has been owned and operated by the Port Townsend-based Schooner Martha Foundation, which maintains her and runs sail training programs. She's the oldest working sailboat in the state of Washington.

The Stockton-based Del Viento, a

34-ft LOD Colvin-designed Tamarack Schooner built in 1975 in Langley, BC, enjoyed her first sail on SF Bay. "It was the first time we had all the sails up at the same time," said owner Mark Hall.

BAADS Team Alpha

BAADS (Bay Area Association of Disabled Sailors) Team Alpha has been campaigning two Paralympic Sonar class boats this year, which represents a big step up in the BAADS racing program.

The team scored second and fourth in the SBYC Friday Night Series, and second and fourth in the Jazz Cup in their division. Alpha 1 also scored second in the Jazz Cup's X division, the combined SBYC and BenYC entries.

Three BAADS members bought the first Sonar, Alpha 1, for $1,500 from the Sacramento Sea Scouts in 2012. Dick Swanson (of the J/120 Grace Dances and now the J/111 Bad Dog) generously purchased the second Sonar from a U.S. Paralympic Team member for BAADS earlier this year.

Team Alpha has about 30 BAADS

members on the roster, but only about a dozen actively race the Sonars. All have physical disabilities of one sort or another, from quadriplegics to veteran amputees, with the exception of a few able-bodied volunteers who also help out and race regularly. Team Alpha usually races with four crew, but three is the standard Paralympic configuration.

For the first time in BAADS' short racing history, two of their three-person crews will race in Sonars at the U.S. Disabled Sailing Championship in Galveston, TX, on October 30-November 2. Team Alpha will also race in the SBYC midwinter series.

See www.baads.org for more info.

Mercury Nationals

With a pretty steady 8- to 10-knot breeze, 21 Mercuries sailed on the slightly lumpy waters off Santa Barbara on August 22. A good current was running up the coast.

Friday's three races were all double sausages finishing downwind. The first start had two general recalls. The race committee wisely put up the I flag, (signaling 'around the ends' starts), and the problem was solved for the rest of the day. Chris Raab with Kenny Dair went right immediately, the recommended way to sail on the coast. Jack McAleer with Remy Margerum played the subtle shifts up the middle and had a nice battle with Raab, who won the Ray Johnson Perpetual Trophy.

In race two, those who stayed more on the left side of the course had the best results. Jim and Kathy Bradley took the lead and never gave it up, and won the Densmore Perpetual Trophy. Paul Cayard (a world-class Star sailor among his more famous accomplishments) with Kenny Maring battled with Doug Baird and Jim Taylor for second place.

By race three, the wind was at the top of the range with a little more wave action. Raab went right and Brad Bergeron went left. Bergeron crossed the entire fleet, but Raab caught him at the windward mark. It was all over, and Raab went on to win the Jenkins Perpetual Trophy. Bergeron continued his fine racing and placed second. Pat Bradley sailed up the middle on the second beat and got third. Dave West and Chris Krueger had broken a side stay before the first race, were towed in, made the repair, raced the third race, and placed fourth. Cayard hung in there and placed fifth.

On Saturday, race four featured a triple-sausage course finishing downwind in about 8 knots of breeze with subtle shifts and relatively smooth seas. Those who punched a bit to the left and then went right made out over those who went hard right from the start. West took a very good lead over Greg Dair with Alec Caterson. However West went to a wrong mark, and Dair took the Holden Sanford Perpetual Trophy for winning the fourth race. Raab and Cayard were dueling, with third place going to Raab and fourth to Cayard.

Race five was a triple sausage finishing upwind. The right side of the course paid off this time. Jim Bradley led the way in the first turns as the breeze was picking up to 10-12 knots and there was a little slop on the water. Baird, in second place was able to power through and win the John Koenig Perpetual Trophy.

Chris Raab won his sixth Mercury Nationals, Jim and Kathy Bradley won the Jack and Jill Perpetual Trophy, and Brad Bergeron won the silver fleet.

Bay Area Leukemia Cup

To the 75+ crews registered for the Leukemia Cup at SFYC on September 21, the drab, windless weather gave indications it could linger longer than usual, worrying those looking forward to the fresh, bright breezes of San Francisco Bay. But the day, like the regatta's stellar fundraising record, finished on a high note.

The afternoon courses were set for Bay tours to Yellow Bluff, Point Blunt and Blossom Rock, giving everyone a chance to search the Bay for the shifting, moderate breeze and contend with the building ebb. The pre-start was crowded as eight classes waited their turn, watching four classic yachts reach back and forth through the fleet.

Rounding Yellow Bluff, the fleet made the long run down to YRA Mark 8 off Point Blunt with the tacticians favoring the south shore of Angel Island to dodge the building ebb. You could win $10,000.

That is, if you have what it takes to sail, row or paddle 750 miles from Port Townsend, WA, to Ketchikan, AK, on a boat with no engine. Yeah, at first we thought this was a joke too.

The R2AK is "like the Iditarod, on a boat, with a chance of drowning," according to the event's website, www.racetoalaska.com. The race starts on June 6, 2015, with a 40-mile dash to Victoria, BC, before jumping off for the long haul to Southeast Alaska.

With our Quickie Historical Tour of the Prime Charter Venues of the Eastern Caribbean.

Sailing in History's Wake Through Turquoise Waters

We actually felt rain falling in the Bay Area the other day — we're just sure of it. And that means there might actually be a winter this year in these latitudes. But even if it doesn't get so cold, wet and nasty that you are left yearning for sunshine, let us remind you that the prime sailing months in the turquoise waters of the Eastern Caribbean coincide with wintertime here on the West Coast.

So we'll follow a familiar autumn theme this month, and take you on an island-by-island tour of the world's most popular yacht chartering region, the Eastern Caribbean. From the Virgin Islands to Grenada, a 500-mile chain of verdant islands are laid out along an ancient volcanic ridge. Each unique in its own way, these isles serve as an idyllic destination for island-hopping sailors — especially since the easterly trade winds serve up 12 to 20 knots of breeze nearly every day of the year.

Subtle — and not-so-subtle — reminders of each island's history are apparent in architecture and cuisine, as well as in the cultural traditions of local residents. And what a remarkable history it is! During the Colonial Era, European nations fought continuously over the patchwork of islands that cartographers call the Antilles. As a result, some isles changed hands — and national allegiances — time and time again, with the Spanish, French, Dutch and British being the major players.

What follows is a quickie overview of the Eastern Caribbean's major charter venues, with a few of our favorite historic footnotes thrown in along the way.

Bareboat charter bases can be found throughout the island chain, all offering both late-model multihulls and monohulls. For the right price, you could also arrange for a luxury crewed charter to pick you up virtually anywhere within the string of islands. If that's your style, you'll find the most popular crewed yacht bases in the British Virgin Islands, St. Maarten and Antigua.

Within a typical one-week or 10-day charter, you'll need to focus on one of a half-dozen venues: The U.S. and/or British Virgins (possibly also taking in the so-called Spanish Virgins off Puerto Rico), the Northern Leewards, Antigua and her neighbors, the Northern Windwards, the Grenadines, or Grenada and her neighbors. Each cluster of islands has attractions to consider, as well as its own unique character.

The Virgin Islands — Offering sheltered sailing among dozens of islands and cays that lie in close proximity to one another, plus well-developed — although not overdeveloped — shoreside infrastructure, the Virgin Islands archipelago understandably sees more chartering activity than anywhere else in the Caribbean Basin. They are the obvious choice for first-time charterers, yet their many delights encourage well-traveled sailors to come back again and again.

In the USVI, St. John is our favorite, as it is mostly a national park, and is fringed by spectacular beaches and many tranquil anchorages. Two of our favorite historic sites are there too: the well-preserved Annaberg Plantation, which lies a short walk from the Leinster Bay anchorage, and the Reef Bay Trail. It takes hikers through a lush primeval rain forest to the ruins of a steam-powered sugar mill. You'll see ancient Taino Indian rock carvings — petroglyphs — along the way. (Taxi to the trailhead off Centerline Road or go with a Park Service tour and return to Cruz Bay by boat.)

In the British Virgins our favorite sites lie beneath the surface. Although it's never been proven, legend holds that the Norman Island Treasure Caves were the inspiration for Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island. Whether true or not, it's great fun to snorkel through these coral-encrusted caves — especially with kids.

Even more exciting, however, is scuba diving on the wreck of the Rhone, a Royal Mail Steamer that sank off Salt Island in a horrendous 1867 hurricane. Many parts of the iron ship are still well preserved, but the main attraction is the abundance of sea life here. Brilliantly colored corals, sea fans and sponges are encrusted all over the ruins, and a kaleidoscopic array of fish swarm around and through its iron chambers, undeterred by divers. Since a section of the wreck lies in only 30 feet of water, snorkelers can get close enough to enjoy part of the scene. The wreck was used to film Peter Benchley's The Deep.

The Northern Leewards — The 90-mile Anegada Passage separates the Virgins from the Northern Leewards, where the French/Dutch island of St. Martin/St. Maarten is the largest charter base. Bustling with shore-based tourism, casino gambling and duty-free shopping, the island provides a contrast to some of its sleeper neighbors. The formerly British islands of St. Kitts and Nevis lie only a day's sail away and, while they are slowly developing, you would never use the word 'bustling' to describe them. Both still have vast agricultural tracts surrounding lofty volcanic peaks, and shore-based tourism is largely confined to a handful of renovated plantations. Although their partially protected anchorages can be a bit rolly, they are well worth a visit, as walking their centuries-old streets makes you feel as though you've traveled back in time to an era when life was slow and simple.

It's well worth taking a taxi tour of either island, but our favorite historic site here is the massive Fort Brimstone on St. Kitts. It earned the moniker Gibraltar of the West Indies in the 1700s. Back then, its weather-worn battlements afforded 360° protection. Today they introduce visitors to a 70-mile view that includes St. Maarten, St. Barth, Saba, Statia, Nevis and Montserrat.

A former Swedish colony, tiny St. Barth is a gem of the Leewards. It lies only a few hours' sail from bustling Dutch St. Maarten.

When it's time to quicken the pace again and jump back into the here and now, it's only a half day's sail to trendy St. Barth, favorite haunt of the rich and famous, as well as salty international sailors. This tiny, well-scrubbed French island was originally the only Swedish colony in the Caribbean. While the inner harbor of the main town, Gustavia, was once a haven for pirates and smugglers, it now attracts some of the most splendid yachts in the world during the winter months.

Antigua — Formerly a British colony, Antigua has been a Caribbean maritime center since the 1700s, when the British and French fought ferociously for dominance of the Eastern Caribbean isles. Today, as most sailors know, the island is the winter charter base of choice for many of the world's most spectacular luxury crewed yachts, and is also home to several bareboat bases. The world-famous Antigua Sailing Week (held in late April) should be on every sailor's bucket list. It began 47 years ago when local charter yacht operators decided they needed a forum for end-of-season revelry before sailing off to do summer charters in the Med or New England.

According to the Antigua Tourist Board, the island has a beautiful beach for every day of the year. While that might be a slight exaggeration, it is certainly an island with enough protected anchorages and shoreside attractions to keep charterers happy for a week or two — especially if you include a couple of days at its sister island, Barbuda. Although it's only 40 miles distant, few sailors visit that minimally developed isle, as the approach is peppered with reefs and it has few services. To our way of thinking, though, its isolation is a huge incentive to go there. White sand beaches skirted by brilliant turquoise water stretch for miles without bearing a single footprint, and the snorkeling is superb. Today, these two neighboring islands are united as the nation of Antigua and Barbuda.

The centerpiece of Antigua's historical legacy is the painstakingly restored English naval station called Nelson's Dockyard. Built within a natural hurricane hole, it was an ideal base for the West Indies Squadron, within which Nelson served as a young officer. Today, the workshops, barracks and officers' quarters of old have been converted to restaurants, hotels and shops without sacrificing their inherent charm.

The Southern Leewards & Northern Windwards — Forty miles south of Antigua lies the large French island of Guadeloupe. Together with Martinique, St. Barth and St. Martin, these islands comprise the French West Indies, which is a department (or state) of France, whose residents have all the rights of other French citizens. As such, these islands have a steady influx of French nationals, and their general character is quite different from that of their formerly British and Spanish neighbors.

Large and mountainous, Guadeloupe is the first of five tall islands that are much more lush, and consequently much more abundant in agriculture, than their northern cousins. Guadeloupe, for example, has an extensive rain forest with towering waterfalls and jungle-like vegetation. Fine creole cuisine on Guadeloupe and Martinique is a highlight, and provisioning is better — and more fun — there than almost anywhere else in the island chain.

History buffs will enjoy seeing the colonial-era relics at Guadeloupe's Fort Fleur d'Epée and the ancient Arawak Indian rock carvings at the Parc Archeologique des Roches Gravées. But you'll also want to leave time to snorkel or dive at the Cousteau Underwater Park at Pigeon Island, which lies just offshore. And you must spend at least one night at the charming cluster of tiny islands called the Iles des Saintes, where fishing is still the main livelihood and casual waterside eateries abound.

The stretches of open-water sailing between these central islands can yield brisk winds and bouncy sea conditions, in contrast to the flat-water sailing in the lees. Directly south of Guadeloupe is Dominica — an anomaly of the colonial era, as it is a former British colony sandwiched between two French islands.

The poorest and least-developed island nation in the lower Caribbean, Dominica is not without its attractions. Hiking through the massive Central Forest Reserve is a nice contrast to those sunbaked days on the water. And while there you'll want to visit the Carib Indian Reservation, the last in the Caribbean, where evidence of centuries-old traditions still remains, such as thatch-roofed huts and dugout canoes.

Another booming open-water sail will take you to Martinique (the northernmost island of the Windward Antilles). Although the bustling city of Fort de France might be a bit too busy for your tastes, there are a number of coastal anchorages and fishing villages well worth visiting. For the culturally curious, we have two suggested stops. First, the Centre d'Art Musée Paul Gauguin at Carbet, which houses works and mementos from the artist's stay here prior to his emigration to French Polynesia. And second, St. Pierre's Musée Volcanologique which commemorates the catastrophic 1902 eruption of Mt. Pelee here, which killed all but a single survivor.

Although there are huge French charter fleets on both Martinique and Guadeloupe, most Americans charter out of St. Lucia when visiting this part of the Caribbean. Bareboat fleets are based at both Marigot and Rodney Bays.

St. Lucia probably has the most volatile history of any Eastern Caribbean island. The ferocious Carib Indians kept European navies at bay for more than 100 years before finally succumbing to their might. The British and French then began a protracted struggle to con-

It's well worth taking a taxi tour through the inland countryside with its vast agricultural tracts. While you're at it, stop at Fort Charlotte atop lofty Morne Fortune. Even if you're not interested in the 18th century artifacts there, you'll love the panoramic view from the ancient battlements, which includes the tooth-like Pitons mountain range to the south.

Grenada and The Grenadines — We've always thought the naming of this southern stretch of islands could have been better thought out. After all, the northern nation within this archipelago is officially called St. Vincent and the Grenadines — a mouthful — and the southern group is lumped under the title Grenada — although that's also the name of the principal island in the group. In any case, it's a wonderful region that features short hops between anchorages, charming little waterside towns, and a laid-back pace of living. A nice loop tour of the Grenadines can be done in a week from charter bases in St. Vincent — the large, verdant island at the area's northern end. But with 10 days to burn you could do a one-directional trip from Grenada to St. Vincent, hitting a variety of cozy anchorages and snorkeling spots along the way. Among our favorite stopovers here are idyllic Port Elizabeth on Bequia's Admiralty Bay, the tiny Palm Island Beach Club, the Tobago Cays and Carriacou, where a few old-timers still build hand-hewn boats on the beach.

Grenada's capital, St. Georges, has long had a reputation as the prettiest town in the Southern Caribbean. Both Fort George and Fort Frederick offer commanding views of the harbor below. A taxi tour through Grenada's interior will reveal why it has long been called the 'spice island', as rich fragrances of

As if near-perfect sailing conditions weren't enough, the islands of the Eastern Caribbean hold a wealth of fascinating connections to antiquity that can add immeasurably to the richness of a vacation under sail. Why not check them out this winter?

With reports this month from Eleutheria on cheating death getting through the pass at Maupiti; from Sonrisa on moving from the high life in the Med to the family life aboard in Mexico; from Ichi Ban on continuing budget cruising adventures in the South Pacific; from Joy of Tahoe on 'taxing' issues in the Med; from Landfall on a better life in Mexico; and Cruise Notes.

Eleutheria — Tartan 37 Lewis Allen & Alyssa Alexopolous Transiting the Pass at Maupiti (Redwood City)

Holy shit, what a rush!

Yesterday we sailed out of Bora Bora bound for the little-known and less-visited island of Maupiti. Known as the 'miniature Bora Bora', Maupiti is less visited because we and other cruisers have all heard the horror stories of the dangers of the narrow pass. Stories of boats going aground on the wicked coral reef next to the pass, some with the loss of lives. So our decision to try the pass at Maupiti was not taken lightly.

I read about and studied the pass extensively. The consensus seemed to be that while it wasn't the easiest pass in the South Pacific, it was safe in anything under a six-foot swell. So I watched the weather, and when our GRIBs called for a 4½-foot swell, we went for it. Since there wasn't much wind and it was squally, we decided to motor the 30 miles from Bora Bora. Besides, we didn't want to give the wind and waves a chance to build.

Triumphant and relieved, Lewis and Alyssa stand high above and in front of the narrow pass that had caused them so much concern.

After a somewhat rough passage, we found ourselves a half mile off the southeast corner of Maupiti, staring at the massive swells pounding the reef. There was an endless succession of huge rollers. Their tall plumes of spray seemed to reach halfway to the top of the lush mountains in the background. No matter what the GRIB files were forecasting, it looked to us as if the waves were breaking all the way across the pass. What should we do?

We got on the VHF and asked to speak with anyone who could provide information on conditions at the pass. A nice American guy came back and told us that he wasn't at the pass just then, but had entered a couple of days before, when the conditions were even worse. He said it just looked as though waves were breaking all the way across the pass. But he did confirm that the entrance was very narrow, saying that the breakers would likely be only 50 feet off our beam on both sides. No matter what, he said, stay within the channel markers.

We had a decision to make. Bag it and push on to Mopelia, and miss out on what everyone said was an amazing island. Or push Ellie hard, do our best to keep her in the channel, and not freak out too much. We decided to go for it.

It's hard to describe the feeling we had as we approached the pass. We weren't just scared, we were shaking. The enormous barrels on each side of the pass were terrifying, the pass was indeed extremely narrow, and it was a cauldron thanks to the outflowing current clashing with the huge waves.

I had Alyssa concentrate on the channel markers, and she would yell, "More port! Now starboard! You're off the marks!!"

Our transit was made exponentially more difficult because half the time we were buried in the trough of a roller and couldn't even see the damn channel markers. So the best we could do was line ourselves up again when we were on the crest of a wave.

Mind you, I was fighting the wheel the entire time, trying to keep Ellie lined up with the pass and not get pushed beam-to to the waves. Just as we were at the line of breakers, I felt Ellie rise on top of a particularly large wave and we started to surf!

"Oh shit! Oh shit! Oh shit!!" As we were being pushed down the wave, Ellie rose up over the crest, and the massive wave broke 10 feet in front of our bow!

"Oh shit!" I shouted, "is there another one of those coming?" Totally absorbed in staying in the channel, I didn't have the luxury of being able to turn my head to look aft.

"No, that was it," replied 'Lyss. "They look smaller. Go for it."

I pushed the throttle up to 2,000 rpm, and with Ellie yawing violently, battled the disturbed waters of the pass and the four-knot ebb. The best we could do was two to three knots against the powerful current. Then there was a turn to starboard, and we had to line up another set of marks. We were still fighting a strong current, but the main show was over, as we were once again in flat water. Whew!

Once in the calm waters of the lagoon, we dropped the hook behind a motu near the pass. We could see the anchor land in powdery sand 40 feet below. We paid out our chain and buoyed the anchor while watching huge manta rays flying over the coral heads below.

Once settled, we both took some huge breaths of relief and congratulated ourselves on our stellar communication under extreme duress. We then treated ourselves to a glass of wine in a feeble attempt to calm our still-shaking bodies. We'd made it to a new island, and our boat home was safe. We agreed that Maupiti had the second most scary pass we'd attempted. The worst had been Fakarava

North in the Tuamotus, but only due to the fact that it had taken much longer to negotiate that pass, with much greater strain on the engine.

The wave height in the pass here at Maupiti was definitely more than the 1.6 meters — 5.2 feet — forecast in the GRIB files. I believe the GFS model infers wave height directly from average wind speed, which is not very helpful. If anyone knows how to pull a more reliable wave forecast via SailDocs, I'd love to hear about it.

"At least the only boats here in the lagoon are crewed by real sailors," Alyssa said.

"Either real sailors or idiots with huge cojones," I replied.

still living an adventurous life, not many couples can compete with Nick and Melissa. Except for fellow Australians, of course, who are world-class adventurers.

Nick grew up around the water in Sydney, sailing every weekend. Yet he claims the best thing that ever happened to him was in 1967 when his father moved the family to Tivoli, a farm on the outskirts of Hobart, Tasmania.

"Riding horses, driving tractors, and some honest labor all gave me a feeling for nature and mechanics, which has served me well over the past 40-odd years. There isn't much you can't fix on a farm without some fencing wire — a good skill to have on a cruising boat."

While in Tassie, Nick built a ferrocement boat that he and a mate would enter in the Melbourne to Osaka Race. This is after two years of cruising New Zealand, Fiji, Tonga and New Caledonia. After selling the boat in Japan, he and his then-wife heard that yachties could make money running boats in the Med. In 1987 they landed a captain/stewardess job on a 55-ft motoryacht in Mallorca.

"The the yacht was fine, but the owners were hopeless nouveaux riches who were just plain rude. Shortly after jumping that ship, we found Ian, a flamboyant Australian entrepreneur with a glamorous wife and three very young children. He'd just bought a 60-ft plywood HOS (Heap of Shit) Ocean Fantasy. This 'yacht' was built in Spain from an Italian design and had two 650-hp Detroit Diesels that burned almost as much oil as fuel."

After four years, Nick was drawn to do another Melbourne to Osaka Race, this time with a 39-footer he'd bought in Plymouth, England and sailed to the Med. Among other things, it took a 54-day nonstop passage to get to Cape Town from Gibraltar. It might have been a mistake wanting to enter the race, as the rudder stock snapped above the stuffing box in the Southern Ocean. The repair in Perth was perhaps a bit too robust, for when the boat later hit a submerged object near Guam, the rudder held out but the hull didn't. Within half an hour, the boat was on the bottom and he and his mate were in their liferaft. They were rescued by the U.S. Coast Guard.

Back in Europe, Ian had purchased the Wild B despite Nick's objections that it was another HOS. "The saying 'you can't shine shit' was applicable to the 63-ft Italian plywood speedboat with twin 1,500 hp MTUs," says Nick, "though we did spend several years trying."

Melissa reports that she's lived in just about every state in Australia, as well as several years in New Guinea. In 1992, while in her late teens, she and her boyfriend set off on a long trip to Europe with just a few bucks in their pockets. They had a grand time, of course, including three memorable months in India, Kashmir and Nepal on the way home.

Mel's boyfriend continued his studies and got serious about a career. Mel did her stint in Hotel Management Studies, but by 1997 was overcome with wanderlust. Fate would put her and Nick together in a whirlwind romance later that year in the yachting center of Palma de Mallorca.

The couple spent some time trying to make a silk purse out of the pig that was Wild B, but the new Swiss owner finally decided to have a proper 130-ft displacement motoryacht built in the Netherlands. Nick would oversee construction, which would take nearly two years.

"Solaia was built in the quaint eel-smoking village of Monnickendam about 15 miles outside Amsterdam," remembers Mel. "It was hard living so close to Amsterdam. Not! What an amazingly lively city with so much to offer. We absolutely loved it there.

SONRISA

A buff Nick in the buff up in the Sea.

"While Nick supervised the boat project," Melissa continues, "I got my feet wet working at several high-end restaurants, including Mario's, just for the privilege of being able to watch some of the most heartfelt food preparation in the world. It was hard work, but I loved every moment. At the same time, I was charged with overseeing the interior details of Solaia, doing things like ensuring every dish and piece of crystal was chosen for perfection. It wasn't difficult spending someone else's money."

In 2001, Nick and Melissa launched the boat into the ice of a frozen canal, and for the next five years the couple would run the boat with a crew of eight. They were based out of Antibes in the South of France, and took the boat throughout the Med, the Caribbean and the Baltic. During Christmas they'd usually look after the boss's guests at his chalet in Gstaad, where they would ski and walk the dogs. "It was very hectic work, but a blast," remembers Melissa.

and Mexico. They've happily been in Mexico ever since.

Having traveled and worked in some of the world's greatest places on a no-expense budget, some people might be shocked to find that the couple have found humble Mexico to be about their favorite place in the world. Not only have they been happily cruising in Mexico since 2010, living the simple family life, they're even thinking about buying some land south of La Paz. Mind you, this despite the fact that in 2000 they purchased Lavagna, 25 acres of orchard and bush next to Nick's favorite surf break about 50 minutes out of Hobart, Tasmania. "Most sensible investment we ever made," he says, "and our organic farm-to-be." But that's for down the road.

"We just booked Sonrisa into La Paz's Costa Baja Marina for 2015," Nick reports. "It's a serious change for us, with the boys being enrolled in a local Montessori school. Mel will try and finish her course in Nutritional Medicine, a subject she has always been passionate about, while I'll try to get my buggered back fixed. By the way, I've had lots of dealings with private hospitals in Mexico, and found them to be very impressive. The care I've gotten has been excellent, and the cost very reasonable. We will also try to improve our bastard Spanish.

"Just to keep our friends updated, we spent three months this summer in Europe with the boys, visiting friends from our days working there, and enjoyed a great week on a rented motorboat on the Garonne Canal in France with godparents. We got back onto Sonrisa in August in Puerto Vallarta, came up to the Sea of Cortez, and have spent three months in the Loreto area.

"We're currently anchored off our favorite island, Isla Coronado, not far

It's hard to believe, but not everyone considers that living and working the high-life on a luxury yacht is the apex of existence. "When I fell pregnant with Benjamin in 2006, we decided it was time to leave Solaia for a more simple life," says Melissa. "In lieu of finding another crew after 11 years, Jacques, our great friend, decided to exit from yachting."

It was after leaving Solaia that Nick and Melissa began to live their dream. "We used to have a poster of a Lagoon 440 catamaran stuck to the wall of our cabin on Solaia, keeping us on our toes," says Melissa. "I never thought the day would come that we would get one ourselves, but we took delivery of ours in La Rochelle in 2007, and spent six great months outfitting her. She's been the home to our family, including sons Benjamin and Huon, since 2007 and we haven't looked back."

After taking delivery of Sonrisa in 2007, they cruised the Atlantic coast of France, Portugal and Spain, then crossed the Atlantic to St. Martin in the Caribbean. They spent 2008 cruising the Caribbean. In 2009, they did Colombia, Panama and Costa Rica. In 2010, they did Costa Rica, Nicaragua, El Salvador

We're supposed to get sustained 30-knot winds. Typically it's dead calm here, and in summer just under 100 degrees.

"Because I'm a normal healthy guy," continues Nick, "I liked the September Changes photo of Karen Riley sailing naked aboard Beau Soleil. We agree with the Rileys' belief that there's not much need for clothes when cruising. So I've attached a photo (see previous page) of Mel, my beautiful wife, on the beach near Isla Coronado. I'm so proud of her, as she spends so much time on nutrition for our whole family and keeping us fit. I guess 'Beach Bum' would be a good caption. And by the way, Mel would be only too happy to have the photo published.

Ichi Ban — Columbia 34 Mk II Justin Jenkins & Anna Wiley Loving Tonga and Fiji (San Diego)

What's shakin' my cruising friends? I hope it's shaking as good for you as it is for Anna and me aboard the Columbia 34 we bought for $2,000. (Not to mislead anyone, we naturally spent a lot more money getting her ready to cruise.)

Anna and I finally left American Samoa in late May, and arrived in the Vava'u Group of Tonga on June 1, Anna's birthday. We spent two fantastic months in Tonga, which was a real breath of fresh air — literally and figuratively — after American Samoa. There are scores of beautiful anchorages — The Moorings identifies over 40 of them by number in a 12-mile-by-12-mile area for their charterers — and none are more than a few hours away from the farthest.

Because the anchorages were so close together, we visited new spots all the time, and found each one to be great for diving and snorkeling. I've started doing lots of spearfishing, and have done pretty well. I don't want to brag, but the parrot fish shudder when they see me jump in the water.

There is a strong cruising community in Tonga, with lots of services for cruisers. There is a cruisers' net on VHF 26, and thanks to repeaters all around the Vava'u Group, you can get great reception almost everywhere. This means you can get the latest weather, stay in touch with friends, and be active in the cruisers' buy/sell/trade market. We've done quite well selling stuff in the latter, as Ichi Ban has been something of a floating flea market in Tonga. We were able to get rid of a lot of stuff we weren't using, and at a decent price. We're hand-to-mouth cruisers, so that allowed us to finance a couple of more months of cruising.

Anna and I are young, so we've enjoyed the popping party scene at Neiafu, which is the center for cruisers in Tonga. The backpacker's hostel in town attracts lots of young foreigners, and we've had a great time partying with them. Anna and I also played music at several different clubs in Neiafu, such as the Aquarium and the Bounty Bar. They gave us free drinks and food in return for playing. Nice to eat some red meat for a change.

We also had quite a few raging beach parties in Nuku, a little island with white sandy beaches, great snorkeling, and fine protection from the southeast trades. The island has plenty of coconut trees, which we climbed for a key ingredient in our rum coconut cocktails. There were also plenty of fish to catch for grilling on the fires at night.

Our Canadian friends told us about the 'shot-ski', which is a favorite Canadian drinking device. It's a snow ski with five or more shot glasses glued to the top. As many shot glasses as there are people sit in a row, and when you tilt the shot-ski, everyone has to drink the whole shot at once — or get part of it spilled on them. Friends don't let friends drink alone!

Not having any snow skis on Ichi Ban, I made a tropical version of the shot-ski out of bamboo and oyster shells, and christened it the Bamboo-ski! When it comes to drinking, the Bamboo-ski is like pouring gasoline onto a fire! It contributed to many wild nights in Tonga.

After two months in Tonga, Anna and I were ready to go exploring again, so we set sail for Fiji. We're currently at Savu Savu and have already fallen in love with the place. The food here is good and inexpensive, and butane — $17 U.S. for 20 pounds — is also cheap. I've already found lots of work, from cleaning bottoms to climbing masts. Plus Anna and I have played three shows already, and have learned that we need to put out a tip jar. Last time we played, we scored $100 in one night, along with free food and drinks. What a life, as we're making music, cruising around, surfing, fishing, making friends from all over the world — enjoying life to the max!

We've made lots of contacts for work prospects in New Zealand and Australia, so come November, I think we might be headed to one of those two places.

I'm keen on getting some good surf here in Fiji, so we'll soon be headed for world famous spots such as Taveuni and Qamea. But first we have a big show tonight at the Copra Shed Marina in Savu Savu. The marinas in Fiji are sweet, the people are terrific, and they take care of all the stuff for Customs and Biosecurity, as well as the paperwork for cruising. And almost for free. We're anchored outside, of course, but hot showers and moorings are available for $10/night, a pretty good deal.

The people here in Fiji are simply world-class. The ethnic Fijians are very warm and kind, and the Indians just the same. The Indian food here is incredibly delicious and cheap. What more could any cruiser ask for?

Joy of Tahoe — Lagoon 440 Cat Walt & Joy Kass Adventures in Europe (Tahoe City)

Last month we discussed our adventures in getting JOT to Europe, and our way of working around the Schengen regulations that prohibit Americans — and other foreigners — from staying longer than 90 days without leaving Schengen Area (most of the EU) for at least 90 days.

Now let's talk about Value Added Tax (VAT). If you're not careful, a 20% VAT could be slapped onto your boat and all her gear. According to EU law — as confirmed by an EU official, officials in the UK, and a tax expert at the French Embassy in Washington, D.C. — there is no VAT due on a non-EU boat and her contents for the first 18 months. If you can prove that you were away from your boat for six of those months, the VAT can even be extended to 24 months.

Does it seem odd to anyone else that a person's boat can stay more than a year longer in Schengen Area countries than the person can? After all, it's the person, not the boat, who would be spending all the money to enrich the economies of those countries. Furthermore, when the boat's time limit is up, she only has to leave the EU for one day before she can return for another 18 months, while a person has to leave the Schengen Area for 90 days before coming back for just another 90 days.

The only sure places within the confines of a Med cruise to reset the VAT clock for your boat are non-EU countries such as Morocco, Libya, Algeria, Tunisia and Egypt — the latter four not being the most attractive choices given the current political climate. There is also Turkey, but it's too far away for us. In addition, there are conflicting reports on whether you have to apply for a Turkish Long Term Visa from your home country.

We are leaning toward sailing to Morocco from Gibraltar, which would reset JOT's VAT clock. Casablanca, anyone? And then we'll be on to Port Ginesta, Spain — just north of Barcelona — and the French Med for the winter.

A 20% VAT hit would naturally be significant for any cruiser's budget, which is why we're a little concerned about our French Long Stay Visas. We've heard that these may technically make us residents of France, in which case our boat wouldn't be exempt from VAT. Getting the real story on tax and immigration issues for individual cases is not easy in this part of the world. We'll just have to see if our version of 'low profile' works.

Another concern is the lack of consistent administration within the EU when it comes to the interpretation of EU law. For example, we've read that Spain considers more than six months in their country an excuse to try to collect VAT. Greece has similarly imposed VAT and/or other taxes on yachts. Today we were notified that Greece has increased its liability insurance requirements to approximately $700,000 U.S. So don't bring your boat to Europe looking for certainty.

Despite all of the self-inflicted and other types of drama, our cruise to Europe has certainly been worth the effort. Sipping Champagne on the Champ Elysees at midnight after watching the Tour Eiffel light up is remarkable. We also witnessed some of the D-Day+70 commemorations. It might have only been the special time of year, but the residents of Normandy eloquently expressed their appreciation of the heroic efforts made by our parents on their behalf.

Prices in England and Europe? We found the cost of living in England to be about double that of the U.S., although berthing is similar to that on the Chesapeake. As for the quality of food and especially the service, the less said the better. Other opinions are out there.

The three-day-a-week markets in France and other European countries are "superb food and wine experiences". Oh-là-là, yes, they are.

In France, boat stuff is about 50% more expensive than in the U.S., and that's before they add the 20% VAT. The exception has been parts for our Yanmar diesel. The French wanted 600 euros, plus shipping, for one injector. That's about $1,000 U.S. after duty and shipping. We got one from the States for $300. Berthing in France is a little less expensive than in the Chesapeake, and most French marinas include electricity and Wi-Fi in their base rate.

For what it's worth, we had to pay more for one night's stay at the Holiday Inn at San Francisco's Fisherman's Wharf than we did when we splurged on a four-star boutique hotel in Paris.

When it comes to dining out, it's about the same price in France as it is in Tahoe / San Francisco / D.C. for similar quality food. This is true in a large part because the tip is included and because excellent house wines are inexpensive. As floating 'apartment' owners, we cannot get enough of the outstanding local products to be found in the boulangeries and charcuteries, and the fruits and vegetables at the Tuesday/Thursday/Saturday street markets. They are superb food and wine experiences.

Our situation requires daily Internet, so coffee shop Wi-Fi doesn't work for us. In the U.K, you can get a cheapo phone for $30, and for another $30 per month get unlimited data to create a Wi-Fi hotspot to an onboard router. In France we've gotten weak, but free, Wi-Fi in Port Chantereyne. It was made usable with our outside Ubiquity Bullet omni antenna with 8 db gain omni. SKYPE is amazingly useful and affordable, so thank you, Bill Gates.

The scenery and history in England and Europe? Beyond expectations. Whatever your interests, you have a good chance of finding much to satisfy them.

Visa and MasterCard are accepted almost everywhere — Amex not so much — but watch out for cards that charge 3% foreign transaction fees. Most do. Automatic charge machines — toll roads, parking lots, etc. — will not accept U.S. cards, as we have not adopted the chip & PIN system. Cash can be extracted from the common money machines, but it's fairly expensive depending on your bank.

To reinforce the adage that cruising is repairing your boat in exotic places, we must stop reporting so we can attend to boat chores: the UV-rotted trampoline attachments, Honda impeller replacement, and the ever-exciting holding tank stoppage.

For anyone contemplating bringing their own yacht to the EU, please carefully read the fine print and project how it will affect your style of cruising. In our case it has been a fantastically rewarding experience of a lifetime.

Landfall — Vagabond 49 Steve, Tamiko and Eli (17) Willie Mexico Is Better For Us (Morro Bay)

In November 2011, we did a Sightings piece on the Willie family, who happily describe themselves as "unconventional." The United States no longer seemed like a viable place for them to live, so they had gotten a good deal on Landfall, a project boat, and were fixing her up with plans to head to Mexico.

Mexico was the goal because Tamiko, a former member of the Coast Guard who at 22 rescued a group of Navy Seals who had flipped their boat in the surf at Morro Bay, does better in warmer weather. After leaving the Coast Guard, she'd been shocked by 95,000 volts in an industrial accident and suffered severe nerve and other damage. Although hurting and having to take numerous medications, she hurts less in warmer weather.

And there was son Eli, then 14, a dwarf who suffered from being ignored if not shunned because he is, as Tamiko puts it, "weird". In addition, Steve, a former Porsche mechanic, needed expensive asthma medicine. If that wasn't enough, having a family was becoming economically ever more difficult in the once Golden State.

The Latitude update is that the Willie family, who mostly base out of La Cruz now, are doing much better in Mexico. During the winter of 2011-2012 they had slowly made their way down the coast, and by May had arrived at Ensenada. That's where things began to change for the better.

Tamiko had gone looking for a doctor, as she needed to get a prescription filled for nerve pain. "If I didn't take it," she says, "it felt like fire ants were peeling the flesh from the bones on the left side of my body."

The first recommended doctor wasn't in, so she visited the second, Dr. Villadrana, an internist, at his walk-in clinic. "When I told him I needed to get my super-expensive pain prescription filled, he said it wasn't available in Mexico. He also told me that I was taking extremely high doses, and spent about 90 minutes with me getting to know more about my medical situation — even though I didn't get their until 7 p.m. I explained to him that my stateside insurance company's idea of 'therapy' consisted of doctors pumping me full of drugs to get me to "come to terms" with what they said was the fact that I would be a gimp in a wheelchair forever. They wanted to flush my life away.

After patiently listening to me and asking questions, Dr. Villadrana, who is also a clinical nutritionist, told me he thought he could help me. And he did."

Not only did the doctor get her on a much lower dose of a different pain medication, he had Tamiko dramatically change her diet. "He explained that he didn't think all of my problems were related to nerve damage, but the fact that I was malnourished — even though I weighed almost 200 pounds. He told me that I wasn't able to process foods normally."

"The doctor put me on a strict six-week elimination diet to cleanse my system," says Tamiko. "Then he got me off dairy and gluten, and has me taking potassium and other vitamins and supplements. I still have a lot of nerve pain, and still have to take medications, but I'm feeling much better than I did before."

Tamiko is so much more mobile that Steven, Tamiko and Eli at Nelson's Boatyard in Alameda back in November 2011. They got their boat together and are happy in Mexico.

a few weeks ago she was able to run down the beach to try to help Pete when Easy Living, his big old powerboat, was blown up onto the rocks at La Cruz. "Pete told me he'd been living on the hook on that boat at La Cruz for 30 years, and hadn't come into the dock for four years," says Tamiko. "We were able to save the boat — without the help of the Mexican navy — but Pete is going to part her out anyway."

In addition, the former Coastie took charge about a year ago when Sig and Phyllis Horne-man's Berkeley-based Cal 29 Duct Tape went onto the rocks at La Cruz. "I took charge just like it was the old days in the Coast Guard," says Tamiko.

"Life for us in Mexico, and especially La Cruz, is far superior to the States," says Tamiko. "It's not just my health, but it's also better for Eli, because he gets a much better reception and more respect than in the States. The people in Mexico are much more accepting than Americans, because if you're missing a limb or have some obvious problem, you're not shunned like you are in the States. If you're weird, people think "I've got something weird about me, too", or "I've got a weird cousin or uncle."

Now 17, Eli even has his own business. Steve, his father, explains how it came about:

Eli's smaller hands are proving to be an asset when working in the tight quarters of the in-nards of some of the winches.

"One day our friend Rotten Robby said, "Hey Eli, I used to maintain and repair winches. You can do it for less money than me, and because your hands are smaller, you can reach everything easier."

"I'm an old race car guy," says Steve, "so ever since Eli was a kid he'd watch me do things like rebuild transmissions. He's really good mechanically. We had him start by doing the winches on our boat, and after about two winches he knew more than I did. He's got it down."

"We don't have a lot of spare parts," Steve continued, "so Eli is lucky that Mike Danielson of Puerto Vallarta Sails, who has a lot of spares, told Eli he is welcome to his treasure trove of parts. Mike has been great, doing everything he can to help Eli. And Katrina has helped, too, as she puts the word out for Eli on the Banderas Bay net."

"Eli started doing winches in February this year, and after the first couple of boats his business exploded," says Steve. "Since then he's worked on the winches of about 20 boats. Now is the slow time of year, of course, so he hasn't had much business lately. But he's ready for the owners to return to their boats and new boats to arrive so he can get started again. I'm really proud of Eli, too, because he's good at saving his money."

After the Willies helped rescue Duct Tape about a year ago, they thought about buying Duct Tape's dinghy for Eli, but decided he wasn't quite ready. But when the appreciative Hornemans came back after being up in the Sea, they decided to give the inflatable to Eli in return for the Willies' help and Eli's doing all their winches. Eli needed an outboard, and was able to buy just what he needed, a used air-cooled engine that only weighs 12 pounds. For Eli, the dinghy and outboard are like his getting his first car. It means freedom, as well as the ability to get to jobs on his own.

After Easy Living went up onto the rocks, Steve reports that Landfall was the only boat left in the La Cruz anchorage. Then came hurricane Norbert and 12-ft surf.

"Even though we were in 24 feet of water, I wasn't convinced that the waves weren't going to break on us. So we came into the marina at La Cruz. Given the huge surf, we expected the surge to be really bad, but it wasn't bad at all, no worse than when there is head-high surf."

Norbert's winds weren't too bad either. "We had about 40 knots for half an hour, but that was it. The daily summer squalls are worse. You know, it rains like hell, blows out of the south for an hour or two, and is then usually over. But once we had 44 knots of wind."

What about the humidity of summer? "As long as it's not sunny for 10 days in a row and the wind doesn't stop at night, it's not that much worse than winter," claims Steve. "And it's great for surfing. But if it gets too hot, I jump in the water and stay in for about 90 minutes. That will cool you down."

So far sunny Mexico has been cool for the Willie family. "Our goal is not to be rich in material things, but rich in life experiences — and we're finding that here in Mexico," says Tamiko.

Cruise Notes:

Here's a tip for anyone with a boat

BOTH PHOTOS COURTESY JAKE HOWARD

It's been a quiet hurricane season in the Atlantic/Caribbean so far, although that season is generally considered to last a month longer than in Mexico/Eastern Pacific. So far there have been five named storms, four hurricanes, and one major hurricane. The 30-year norm is 12 named storms, six hurricanes, and three major hurricanes. There are generally fewer tropical storms in the Atlantic than in Mexico, but they usually head east toward land, while Mexican hurricanes tend to head west and away from land.

Hurricane Odile's hitting Baja was bad, particularly with the loss of the lives of cruisers Guenter Trebbow, 76, of Germany, Simone Wood, 47, of London, and Paul Whitehouse, 45, of Wolverhampton, England. However, the sailing community has been hit by much more destructive storms. In particular, massive and powerful hurricane Luis, which hit the Leeward Islands — particularly Barbuda, St. Barth, St. Martin and Anguilla — with 140 mph winds as well as numerous F3 tornadoes in the eye wall.

Luis struck 19 years ago and lasted for 15 days. At one point it was just one of four named storms roaring around in the Atlantic at the same time in the obscenely busy Atlantic/Caribbean hurricane year of 1995. By the time Luis was done, it was deemed responsible 19 deaths, 70,000 people being homeless, and $3 billion in damage. But get this — in St. Martin alone, 1,300 of 1,500 boats, most of them recreational boats, were either driven aground or destroyed. Luis was followed just a week later by hurricane Marilyn.

Luis was also the cause of probably the most famous rogue wave — estimated at 100 feet — in history. This is the one that hit the Queen Elizabeth 2

A week after 'Luis' came through, 'Marilyn' showed up and did this to St. Thomas in the U.S. Virgins. A wicked storm year, that 1995.

Spread; Nature bats last and best. Just days after 'Odile' whipped through Puerto Escondido, grounding and destroying a number of boats, the water along the Ellipse was pretty clear and the normally brown mountains a glorious green. Insets: Other Puerto Escondido damage.

with a dinghy/outboard in Mexico. Get a new TIP (Temporary Import Permit) by the end of the year. The reason is that dinghies/outboards soon have to be listed on the main boat's TIP, or they have to get their own TIP. We recommend the former. A new TIP costs about $51. When filling out the TIP, include the dinghy/outboard at Section Five, not Section Three. If you do the latter, your dinghy/outboard will only be good in Mexico for 180 days instead of 10 years. The same thing applies to sailing dinghies, Jet Skis and the like.

How bad has the Mexican (Eastern Pacific) hurricane season been this year? We researched the records for the five previous years and came up with the following averages per year:

All tropical events — including depressions: 17.2.

Tropical Storms: 7.

Hurricanes: 7.6.

Major hurricanes (which are 125 mph or more): 2.6.

With just over a month to go in the Mexico/Eastern Pacific hurricane season, this year's totals have been:

Total tropical events: 18.

Tropical storms: 5.

Hurricanes: 11.

Major hurricanes: 8.

While it's obviously been a busy hurricane season off Mexico, it should be noted that three of the hurricanes, all of them major hurricanes, were actually quite far offshore and were more threats to Hawaii.

Of the five years we looked at, 2009 was the closest to 2014, as it had 23 events, 12 tropical storms, eight hurricanes, and five major hurricanes.

on her way from Cherbourg, France to New York. Despite her changing course in an attempt to avoid the effects of Luis, waves broke the ship's Grand Lounge windows, which were more than 70 feet above the surface. But that was just the beginning. The following is from the log:

"At 0410 the rogue wave was sighted right ahead, looming out of the darkness from 220°. It looked as though the ship was heading straight for the white cliffs of Dover. The wave seemed to take ages to arrive, but it was probably less than a minute before it broke with tremendous force over the bow. An incredible shudder went through the ship, followed a few minutes later by two smaller shudders. There seemed to be two waves in succession, as the ship fell into the hole behind the first one. The second wave of 28-29 meters, whilst breaking, crashed over the foredeck, carrying away the forward whistle mast."

Canadian weather buoys moored in the area recorded a maximum wave height of 98 feet. There was surprisingly little damage to the QE2.

Hurricane 'Luis' generated a rogue wave equal to the height of the bridge on the mighty 'Queen Elizabeth 2'. She was not seriously damaged.

after Odile ravaged Cabo San Lucas, four big privately-owned sportsfishing boats arrived at Mazatlan carrying a total of 60 Mexican nationals, ages 3 to 65, reports a Latitude source. "The captains were all well-seasoned good American guys, and the boatowners had given them carte blanche to help evacuate their crews and extended families from Los Cabos due to the breakdown of law and order there."

Another source told Latitude that the looting in Cabo actually began after the management at Costco told the employees they could take whatever they wanted. When employees were seen walking out of Costco loaded down, the general public assumed looting was the order of the day and got busy. It's hard to know what really happened in Cabo in the immediate aftermath of Odile, but it's safe to say that La Paz didn't experience the same kind of troubles.

"What will the Sea of Cortez be like as a result of Odile?" several Ha-Ha entrants have asked the Poobah. We can't say for sure, but having been to a number of post hurricane disaster sites, we have a general idea of what to expect. Below the surface, it will be just like before. Indeed, just days after Odile, the water around several sunken boats at Puerto Escondido was as clear and inviting as ever.

Aboveground is not going to be quite as pretty. Small vegetation can recover from the wind damage and salt spray fairly quickly, but there are thousands of downed palm trees and big cacti, neither of which will recover as quickly, if at all.

The most unsightly, however, will be the damage to human-made structures. Lots of businesses and families won't have the money or insurance settlements yet to repair things quickly, and even if they do, there will be a lot of construction going on. It could be a little depressing. Fortunately, none of the marinas suffered much damage, so they will probably look better than most of the rest of the urban areas. Most of the anchorages, and the islands in the Sea of Cortez, will probably be as beautiful as ever. In fact, thanks to Odile's rain, they'll probably be greener than normal.

In the unlikely event that the Sea proves to not be up to your standards, Mazatlan and the Vallarta Coast beckon just 200 and 300 miles away, respectively, over on the mainland.

"I brought my boat down to Mexico in the 2008 Ha-Ha, which was my third," reports Wally Nevins of the formerly Ventura-based Catalina 42 Andanzas. "and have kept her at Mazatlan's Marina Mazatlan every summer since. A lot of cruisers aren't aware that Mazatlan has much to offer cruisers: the new Golden Zone, the great old Mercado, the Old Town, Olas Altas, the very long malecon, terrific seafood and restaurants, and great service providers. I'm just one of many cruisers who thinks Mazatlan is the best place in Mexico."

For further details on Mazatlan, see the Wanderer's report in the February issue of Latitude.

It all takes place December 12-16th, and is sponsored by the Riviera Nayarit Tourism Department. Latitude 38, the Marina Riviera Nayarit, the Vallarta YC, and Paradise Marina. Catalina Liana of Marina Riviera Nayarit, who will be aboard Profligate for the Ha-Ha again this year, can answer all your questions either during that event or at pr@mari-rivieraviera.com.

Since we're on a roll for cruiser events in Mexico this winter, we should mention that Latitude will again attempt to create a Tenacatita - Barra Sailing Festival just after the start of the new year. There would be a feeder cruise down from Banderas Bay, followed by sailing fun, socializing and other nonsense at Tenacatita Bay, followed by a fun 'race' down to the Grand Marina and/or the lagoon at Barra de Navidad. We're still working on details with the 'Mayor of Tenacatita

Next on the Mexico calendar of activities is perhaps the greatest cruiser fundraising success in the world, the Zihua SailFest. Now in its 14th year, the six-day fundraising fiesta for the education of disadvantaged children in Zihua will be held February 2-8. It consists of cocktail parties, benefit concerts, live & silent auctions, sailboat and dinghy races, a kids' beach day, seminars, a chili cook-off, street fairs, regattas, school tours, work parties and more.

Nearly $64,000 U.S. was raised last year — with generous help from grants from the Bellack Foundation, event volunteer Jane Fiala, cruiser/donor Pete Boyce of Northern California, and the Rotary Foundation. That was enough — along with donated labor and materials — to create 10 new classrooms and benefit more than 400 disadvantaged children in eight schools. When properly supervised, a little money goes farther in Mexico than in the United States.

More on other cruisers' events in Mexico — the Vallarta YC's Banderas Bay Cruisers' Regatta, the La Paz Bay Fest and Loreto Fest — in upcoming issues.

the world is the Blue Grotto of Capri, which extends over 150 feet into the beautiful towering island off the coast of Naples. Sunlight passing through an underwater cavity and the seawater creates the beautiful blue and emerald colors. The entrance is only two meters wide and two meters high, so you have to duck when you go in on one of the many tourist boats.

The grotto azzura was enjoyed by Roman emperors, then avoided for centuries because it was home to sea monsters and witches. After publication of a German book about it in the 1830s, it became a tourist attraction. Alas, the Blue Grotto has become one of the many places, such as Yosemite, that is being loved to death. As one reviewer wrote, "It took us four minutes to get to the grotto by boat, but two hours waiting in line for our boat's short turn inside the cave itself."

A graduate of the University of California at Berkeley, Jim Gregory of the Pt. Richmond-based Schumacher 50 Morpheus is a smart guy, so he came up with a better alternative to a hoi polloi tour. He swam into the grotto before it 'opened' for business one morning. Locals commonly swim in the grotto after it 'closes' at 6 p.m.

Unfortunately, Jim and his wife Debra were unable to come up with a similar crowd-avoidance scheme during their later visit to the Vatican Museum at St. Peter's Square in Vatican City. "I am a bad tourist," Debra confessed. "I hate tours and will not take any in the future. The Vatican Museum is full of amazing things, but when you're packed in with 33,000 others and have to follow the one and only allowed path, you just can't wait to leave."

Our sentiments exactly about standing in line, and at the Vatican Museum in particular. One of the great things about traveling by private yacht is that you get to visit really great places that haven't yet become famous or even widely-known yet, and thus you can often have them to yourself. Take Hidden Beach, the now-famous swim-in beach at the Tres Marietas Islands off Punta Mita. After the publication of one particularly flattering photo of it, Hidden Beach suddenly became hailed as the 'Best Remote Beach In The World' on some of the ridiculous 'best' lists. Until this happened, the Punta Mita panga drivers lived off whale-watching and fishing tours in the winter. Now they're so busy in the summer taking Mexicans to the Hidden Beach that they hardly care about their winter trade.

Speaking of Punta Mita, one August night John and Gilly Foy of the La Cruz-based Catalina 42 Destiny spied a rather large sailboat anchored there. When dawn broke, they realized it was the 245-ft Ron Holland-designed M5, previously known as Mirabella V, the largest sloop in the world.

When Cabo became so chaotic following hurricane Odile, the captains of three sportfishing boats, with permission from the boat owners, took the men who worked on their boats, and their families, to safety in Mazatlan. There were about 60 people in all, ages 3 to 65. The captains who came to the rescue were Roy 'Wilkes' Hammock of the Viking 65 Expedition, Ty Valli of the Hatteras 68 Reel Quest, Chad Herren of the Blackwell 61 Wild Hooker, and owner John Williams and Capt Kevin 'Cubby' Pahl aboard the Hatteras 60 Success.

Unlike the West Coast, where getting to the tropics is normally pretty easy, it can be difficult to get from the East Coast to the Caribbean. After all, it's 1,500 miles instead of just 750, there is only Bermuda for shelter, and there is the threat of both late season hurricanes and early season winter storms. There are three rallies to help sailors get south.

The newest and currently the biggest is the Salty Dawg Rally, currently with 61 entries. The couple who founded and run it are really nice, but have a curious — to us — business model. The event is free, but people are encouraged to become 'members' for $250. Weather permitting, it starts November 2 in Hampton, Virginia, and ends in either the Bahamas or the British Virgins.

The older and much more hands-on — boat and gear inspections — Caribbean 1500 is part of the World Cruising Ltd empire. They leave on the same date from nearby Portsmouth, Virginia for the same destinations. Like all World Cruising Ltd events, it's not cheap, but they give quite a bit of value. Currently they have about 36 entries, including Vincent Ratford of the California-based Lagoon 450 Gem.

The third of the events is the 15th Annual NARC (North American Rally to the Caribbean) from Newport, Rhode Island on November 1 for Bermuda and St. Martin. This is for "pros' boats". Organizer Hank Schmitt, who is big in crew placement, encourages most cruisers to join the other two rallies!

Hurricane season is almost over, which means cruising season is about to begin. We hope you're ready. We sure are!

HERB CRANE

THE BOTTOM LINE IS...when you own a boat, you learn that some things cost more than you imagined. It's not that you're unwilling to spend the money but it sure is nice to know how much something will cost before you say, go ahead. I've learned...if I can rely on the boatyard to do something routine, such as painting the bottom, and the price they quoted me is the price I pay, then I'm a happy boat owner. It's been my experience that you can rely on the price quotes you receive from KKMI. If you've not been a client at either of their yards, you should give them a try.
